*The following Narrative of the Indian Wars, was published by Authority in the Year 1677
as appears by the following Recommendation
prefixed to the Edition then published Viz.*

THE worthy AUTHOR of this Narrative (of whose fidelity we are well assured) by his great pains and industry, in collecting and compiling the several occurrences of this Indian War, from the relations of such as were present in the particular actions, hath faithfully, and truly performed the same, as far as the best information agreeing could be obtained, which is therefore judged meet for public view ; and we whose names are underwritten, deputed by the GOVERNOR and COUNCIL of the Massachusetts Colony to peruse, and licence the same, have, and do accordingly order it to be imprinted, as being of public benefit and judge the AUTHOR to have deserved due acknowledgment and thanks for the same.

PREFACE TO THIS EDITION.

THE gracious hand of Divine Providence in the preservation of the New-England Colonies in their infant state, gloriously appears from the facts, briefly, but faithfully transmitted down to us, by one of our venerable forefathers in the following NARRATIVE of the troubles with the Indians in New-England, a very numerous and barbarous people, dispersed through the wilderness in every part of the land.

These Savages began a War with the first English Adventurers, while they were few in number, yea very few, and strangers in the land. This rendered their deliverance an event truly great and memorable.

They were saved indeed, as by fire: Their loss of men and substance, compared with their numbers and ability, was very great, and long, severely felt.

Heavy as the public expences were to support the War, these were but a very inconsiderable part of the burdens and charges to which particular towns, families and individuals were necessarily subjected, in guards, garrisons, and watchings in their own defence.

The whole Country was the seat of War, and every man procured his bread in jeopardy of his life.

Like Nehemiah's builders, each one toiled with his weapon of war in one hand, and his instrument of labor in the other; exposed every moment to death, from a watchful unseen foe.

In the frequent alarms which spread from town to town, some escaping from danger, ran into greater; others met their own fate in their attempts to relieve their neighbours in the same, or different scattered settlements.

This was the deplorable state of the New-England colonies, a very few towns excepted; a distress, more easily conceived than expressed, and indeed scarcely conceivable by the greater part of the present generation, since the then hideous wilderness is become a fruitful field, and well settled towns overspread the land.

The reader unacquainted with this country in its uncultivated state, may here inquire, Why the first settlers thus exposed themselves, by making disjointed and very distant settlements? Necessity led to this: The lands near the sea-coasts were generally less fertile, and found hard to subdue: therefore, for present subsistence in their feeble condition, they were obliged to seek the borders of rivers and streams, for the sake of intervals and meadows, both on account of their fertility, and of their being open and prepared for immediate improvement.

They were also encouraged in making these scattered settlements by the general friendly disposition of the Natives, who freely sold their lands, for which a valuable consideration was paid, without acception, where a claim was made.

The Indians perceived their interest in admitting their English neighbors, as they furnished them with means of much easier subsistence; and the utmost care was taken by the several governments of the united colonies, to prevent every occasion of distrust.

The Pequod War was confined to the westerly parts of Connecticut. †

Phillip's War, as it is called, began in Plymouth Colony,* but spread through the Massachusetts, New-Hampshire, and province of Maine in extent above 300 miles. And within the compass of one year, the numerous tribes of Savages within the limits of New-England, were drawn into this war, against us, a very few excepted.

Surely we may say, had not the Lord been on our side, when men thus rose up against us, they had quickly swallowed us up.

Our Fathers, indeed had come out of great tribulation, into this wilderness, which, under Providence was a means of improving them in faith, fortitude and patience, to endure hardships beyond a parallel, until they obtain deliverance : And some of the first adventurers lived to see the wilderness become a fruitful field.

But this was not their intended rest : They had sublimer views : They looked for another and better country, that is an heavenly. And however they may have been misrepresented, by ignorant or ill designing persons, they were men of whom the world was not worthy.

The cruel charges of peculiar bigotry, and a persecuting spirit, wantonly alledged against them, are founded on facts not truly stated.

According to the natural course of things in this depraved and mutable state, their descendants at this day, as might be expected, have in a measure, departed from that simplicity of manners, by which their renowned ancestors were justly distinguished : But notwithstanding it may with truth be asserted, that no instance can be produced, in the present or any past age, among like numbers, where good order has so universally prevailed, as in the New-England colonies, even in populous and opulent towns, especially our capital.

We of this province, with inconsiderable intermissions, from that early period, at unknown expence and loss, have been called to defend our lives and properties against the incursions of more distant savages. Our trust hath been in the name of the Lord our fathers God and Deliverer; and hitherto he hath delivered us. May we never be unmindful of his signal benefits!

We are now under the smiles of divine Providence encreased to a multitude of people.

Our many frontier settlements are continually exposed to savage invasion: And though we trust not to our own bow; yet, as prudence directs, we are all armed and prepared for a defensive War. And yet, having the wormwood and the gall still in remembrance on people more ardently wish and pray, that Wars may forever cease, and peace on earth, and good will among men, universally prevail.

A NARATIVE OF THE INDIAN WARS
IN NEWENGLAND, FROM THE FIRST
PLANTING THEREOF IN THE YEAR
MDCVII, TO THE YEAR MDCLXXVII.

K NOWN unto God are all his works from the foundation of the world, though manifest to us, only by the events of time, that fruitful mother of all things, which in the former age did bring forth, at least did bring to light the knowledge of this western world, called America, that in all foregoing times and ages, lay hid in this obscure, and remote region covered with a veil of ignorance, and locked up from the knowledge of all the rest of the inhabitants of the earth. To whom the honor of its investigation doth of right more properly belong, is sufficiently declared by the history and reports of such as were eye witnesses thereof and not intended to be any part of the present disquisition. The most considerable part of all the north side of America, is called New-England. In the fertility of the soil, salubriousness of the air, and many other commodious advantages, most resembling the country from whence it borrowed its appellation. For the knowledge thereof the world is most beholding to the discoveries of the English, under the conduct of Sebastian Cabot, a famous Portuguese, sent out under the commission of Henry the VIIth, about the year 1497, though since much perfected by the industry and travels of Capt. Gosnold, Capt. Hudson, Capt. Smith, and others of the English nation. North America, this posthumous birth of time is as to its nativity, of the same standing with her two elder sister, Peru and Mexico, yet was suffered to lie in its swadling clothes, one whole century of years, nature having promised no such dowry of rich mines of silver and gold to them that would espouse her for their own, as she did unto the other two, which possibly was the reason why she was not so hastily courted by her first discoveries, nor yet so early secured by any of the Princes of Europe, lying wholly neglected as it were untill a small company of planters, under the command of Captain George Popham, and Captain Gilbert, were sent over at the charge of Sir John Popham in the year 1607, to begin a colony upon a tract of land about Sagadahoch, situate on the south side of the river of Kennebec & about that called Shippscot river, and about twenty miles south west from Pemmaquid, the most northerly bound of all New England. But that design within two years expiring with its first founder, soon after some honorable persons of the west of England, commonly called the Council of Plymouth, being more certainly informed of several navigable rivers and commodious havens, with other places fit either for traffic or planting, newly discovered by many skilful navigators, obtained a grant by patent, under the great seal from King James, of all that part of North America, called New-England, from the 40 to the 48 deg. of north latitude. From which grand and original patent, all other charters and grants of land from Pemmaquid to Delaware Bay, along the sea coast, derive their lineage and pedigree. Thus was that vast tract of land, after the year 1612, cantoned and parcelled out into many lesser divisions and parcels, according as adventurers presented, which said grants being founded upon uncertain, or false descriptions, and reports of some that traveled thither, did many of them interfere one upon another, to the great disturbance of the first planters, and prejudice of the proprietors themselves, as is too well known by any that have had occasion to stay never so little amongst them, many of whom are yet surviving. For notwithstanding the great charge and vast expences the first adventurers were at, the first proprietors of the whole Province of Mayne and others, (reaching from the head of Casco Bay north east, to the mouth of Pascataqua river about sixty miles westward) and the hopes they might have conceived of being the first founders of New Colonies, and of enlarging their estates and inheritances by those new acquired possessions and lordships, there was little profit reaped from thence after the rich fleeces of beaver were gleaned away, nor any great improvement made of those large portions of lands, save the erecting of some few cottages for fishermen, and a few considerable buildings for the planters, which were on those occasions drawn over the sea, to settle upon the most northerly parts of New England.

But whether it were by the imprudence of the first adventurers, or the dissoluteness of the persons they sent over to manage their affairs, or whether for want of faithfulness or skill to manage their trust, they were by degrees in a manner quite deserted almost of law and government, and left to shift for themselves; by which means at last they fell under the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts Colony, not by usurpation, as is by great mistake suggested to his Majesty, but by necessity, and the earnest desire of the planters themselves; to accept of whom, those of the Massachusetts Colony were the more easily induced; in that they apprehended the bounds of their own patent, by a favorable interpretation of the words describing the northern line (three miles beyond the most northerly branch of Merimac river) do reach somewhat beyond Pemmaquid, the most northerly place of all New-England.

This was the first beginning of things in New-England, at which time they were not unlike the times of old, when the people of Judah were said to be without a teaching priest, and without law ; and no wonder things were no more successfully carried on.

In the year 1620, a company belonging to Mr. Robinson's church at Leyden in Holland although they had been courteously entertained by the Dutch, as strangers sojourning amongst them, yet foreseeing many inconveniences like to increase, and that they could not so well provide for the good of their posterity, under the government of a foreign nation, they resolved to intreat so much favor from their own sovereign Prince King James, as to grant them liberty under the shelter of his royal authority, to place themselves in some part of Newengland, then newly discovered ; wherefore having obtained some kind of patent or grant, for some place about Hudson's river, they set sail from Plymouth in September, for the southern parts of New-England, but as they intended to bend their course thitherward, per various casus, per tot discrimina rerum, they were at last cast upon a bosom of the south cape of the Massachusetts Bay called Cape Cod, about the 11th of November, from whence the winter so fast approaching, they had no opportunity to remove ; and finding some encouragement from the hopefulness of the soil, and courtesy of the heathen, they resolved there to make their abode for the future, which they did, laying the foundation of a new colony, which from the remembrance of the last town in England, they sailed from, they called New Plymouth; containing no very considerable tract of land scarce extending an hundred miles in length through the whole cape, and scarce half so much in breadth where it is broadest. The first founders of that colony aiming more at religion than earthly possessions, aspiring not to any large dimension of land in their settling upon those coasts.

At Weymouth also was a plantation begun by Mr. Weston in the year 1622, but it came to little.

The north and south border of Massachusetts Bay being thus planted, the middle part was the more easy to be filled up, which was thus brought about. Some gentlemen and others, observing how it fared with those of New Plymouth, were desirous upon the like ground to make the same attempt for themselves, wherefore having by a considerable sum of money purchased of some gentlemen that had a grant from the council of Plymouth all their right and interest in a plantation begun in the Massachusetts Bay, and having attained a confirmation thereof by patent from King Charles, in the year 1628, they sent over a Governor with several other persons to lay some foundation of another colony in the Massachusetts Bay: And in the year 1630, more of the persons interested in the said patent (thence commonly called patentees) with several other persons, intending to venture their lives and all with them, transported themselves and their families into the said Massachusetts, who did in a short space of time by the accession of many hundreds, who every year flocked after them, make such increase, that in the space of five or six years, there were twenty considerable towns built and peopled; and many of the towns first planted became so filled with inhabitants, that like swarms of bees they were ready to swarm, not only into new plantations, but into new colonies, insomuch that in the year 1635, a new colony began to be planted upon Connecticut river, partly by combination amongst themselves, removing from some towns about the Massachusetts Bay and partly by the interest of a patent purchased of that honorable gentleman, Mr. Fenwick agent for the Lord Say, and Lord Brook, the Lords proprietors of the said river Connecticut, at the mouth of which river they built a fort, (called after their own titles, Say brook fort) commanding the passage of the said river. Yea, such was the confluence of people making over into those parts, that in the year 1637, a fourth colony began to be planted, bearing the name of New Haven, from the first town erected therein, seated near the midway betwixt Hudson's river and that of Connecticut. The sea coast from the pitch of Cape Cod, to the mouth of Connecticut river, inhabited by several nations of Indians, Wampanoogs (the first authors of the present rebellion) Narrhagansets, Pequods, Mohegins, as the more inland part of the country by the Nipnets (a general name for all inland Indians betwixt the Massachusetts and Connecticut river.) The sea coast south west from Plymouth was first possessed by some discontented with the government of the Massachusetts colony, from which some being exiled, others of their friends, accompanying them, settled themselves upon a fair Island to the south west of Cape Cod, now called Rhode Island; others settled upon the Main at a place called Providence, and so by degrees planting toward Narrhaganset Bay, made another plantation called Warwick, which places are since by patent conferred upon the inhabitants of Rhode island; the rest of the country from Pequod river to the river Connecticut, falling within the bounds of Connecticut colony, have since by patent also, been confirmed to the said colony. Things had been very prosperously and successfully carried on in all the aforesaid colonies and jurisdiction, from the year 1620, to the year 1636, at which time the war with the Pequods began. The following account of this war was either left under the hands of such as commanded in chief, or is taken from the mouths of faithful witnesses, that were not only then present but personally concerned and engaged in the service.

There was a nation of the Indians in the southern parts of New-England, called Pequods.

seated on a fair navigable river, twelve miles to the eastward of the mouth of the great and famous river of Connecticut; who (as was commonly reported about the time when New-England was first planted by the English) being a more fierce, cruel, and warlike people than the rest of the Indians, came down out of the more inland parts of the continent, and by force seized upon one of the goodliest places near the sea, and became a terror to all their neighbors, on whom they had exercised several acts of inhuman cruelty; insomuch that being flushed with victories over their fellow Indians, they began to thirst after the blood of any foreigners, English or Dutch, that accidentally came amongst them, in a way of trade, or upon other accounts.

In the year 1634, they treacherously and cruelly murdered Capt. Stone, and Capt. Norton, who came occasionally with a bark into the river to trade with them. Not long after, within the compass of the next year, they in like treacherous manner, slew one Mr. Oldham (formerly belonging to new Plymouth, but at that time an inhabitant of the Massachusetts) at Block Island, a place not far from the mouth of their harbour, as he was fairly trading with them: Besides some other such like acts of perfidious cruelty towards some of the Dutch, that had formerly been trading up Connecticut river: By which practices perceiving that they began to stink in the nostrils of their neighbors whose revenge they now began to fear, and not willing to have to deal with too many enemies at once, they imitated the subtlety of the children of Ammon; when they began to flink before David; endeavoring to strengthen themselves with alliance of some of those they had formerly provoked, that by their assistance they might defend themselves against the rest, not doubting but to make their part good with their foreign enemies, if they could be reconciled to their Indian neighbors, the Narrhagansets, or other home-bred enemies, and could but fortify themselves by a league of friendship with any of their foreign neighbours that were newly come to plant in these parts. To this end they sent messengers with gifts to the Massachusetts in the latter end of the same year 1634; the first messengers were dismissed without an answer: But they being sensible of their own danger, and of the great importance a peace with the English of the Massachusetts might be, pursued the business very earnestly, sending messengers a second time, who offered much Wampam (Indians money) and beaver, with these second messengers: The Governor and Council of the Massachusetts had much conference many days; and at last after the best advice they could take amongst themselves, concluded a peace and friendship with them, upon these conditions.

1. That they should deliver up to the English those persons amongst them that were guilt-ty of Capt. Stone's death, and the rest that were with him.

2. That if the English desired to plant in Connecticut they should give up their right to them.

3. That the English should hence forward trade with them as their friends, which was a chief thing aimed at; the said Pequods being at that time in war with the Dutch, and the rest of their neighbors, on the reasons forementioned. To these conditions they readily agreed, and also cunningly insinuated their desire that their new confederates, the Massachusetts should mediate a peace for them with the Narrhagansets; intimating likewise their willingness that a part of the present which they promised to send should be given to them, standing so much upon their honor, that they would not be seen to give any thing themselves; such was the pride and height of spirit lodged in this company of treacherous villains, the dregs and lees of the earth, and the dross of mankind.

As for Capt. Stone's death they silyly evaded the guilt of it, falsely adding that there were but two left that had any hand therein, and that it was a just quarrel wherein he was slain: For, said they, he surpris'd some of our men, and would by force have compelled them to shew him the way up the river, whereupon the said Stone coming ashore, with two more, was watched by nine of our men (say they) who finding them asleep in the night, flew them to deliver our own men, one of whom going afterward to the bark, it was suddenly blown up : Whereas the truth of the matter was thus ?

The said Capt. Stone formerly belonging to Christophers in the Westindies, occasionally coming to these parts as he passed between this place and Virginia put in at that river, where the indians after they had been often on board his vessel to trade with him, at the last came friendly on board as they used to do, but finding the Capt. asleep in his cabin, took the opportunity to murder him as he lay, casting a covering over him that he might not be discerned by the rest whom they presently after dispatched one after another, all but Captain Norton who made stout resistance, for a long time defending himself in the cook room of the bark till the gun powder which he had set in an open vessel, to be more ready for his use, accidentally took fire, by which fatal accident he was so burned and his eyes so blinded that he could not make any longer resistance, but forthwith fell into the hands of these cruel and blood thirsty wretches, who after they had taken away his life made a prey of all that was in the vessel.

As for Mr. Oldham, he was murdered at an Island called by the Indians, Maniffes (since known by the name of Block Island) but those that murdered him (probably inhabitants of the said Island) fled presently to the Peguods.

by whom they were sheltered, and so became also guilty themselves of his blood.

In the year 1636, the death of this Mr. Oldham † was so manifest, that it could neither be concealed nor excused, the discovery whereof being remarkable, is here inserted.

One John Gallop, with one man more, and two boys, coming from Connecticut, and intending to put in at Long Island, as he came from thence, being at the mouth of the harbor was forced by a sudden change of the wind to bear up for Block Island, or Fisher's Island, where, as they were sailing along, they met with a Pinace, which they found to be John Oldham's, who had been sent to trade with the Pequods, (to make trial of the reality of their pretended friendship after the murder of Capt. Stone) they hailed the vessel, but had no answer, although they saw the deck full of Indians (14 in all) and a little before that had seen a canoe go from the vessel full of Indians like wife, and goods, whereupon they suspected they had killed John Oldham, who had only two boys and two Narrhaganset Indians in his vessel besides himself, and the rather because they let slip, and set up sail (being two miles from the shore, the wind and tide coming off the shore of the Island whereby they drove toward the main land of Narrhaganset) therefore they went a head of them, and having nothing but † The account of Mr. Oldham's death is added to this edition from Mr. Hubbard's Mss. History of New England, from its beginning to 1681.

two pieces, and two pistols, they bore up near the Indians, who stood on the deck of the vessel ready armed with guns, swords and pikes; but John Gallop, a man of stout courage, let fly among them and so galled them, that they got all down under the hatches, and then they stood off again, and returning with a good gale, they stemmed her upon the quarter, and almost overset her, which so affrighted the Indians, as six of them leaped overboard, and were drowned, yet they durst not board her, but stood off again, and fitted their anchor, so as stemming her the second time, they bored her bow through with their anchor, and sticking fast to her, they made divers shot through the sides of her, and so raked her fore and aft (being but inch board) as they must needs kill or hurt some of the Indians; but seeing none of them come forth, they got loose from her, and then stood off again: then four or five more of the Indians leaped into the sea, & were likewise drowned; whereupon there being but four left in her, they boarded her; when an Indian came up and yielded; him they bound and put into the hold: then another yielded; him they also bound, but Gallop, being well acquainted with their skill to unloose one another, if they lay near together, and having no place to keep them asunder, flung him bound into the sea; then looking about they found John Oldham under an old sail stark naked, having his head cleft to the brains; his hands and legs cut as if they had been cutting them off; yet warm: so they put him into the sea: but could not well tell how to come at the other two Indians (who were in a little room underneath with their swords) so they took the goods which were left, and the sails, and towed the boat away, but night coming on, and the wind rising, they were forced to turn her off, and the wind carried her to the Narrhagansets shore, where they left her.

On the 26th of the said July, the two Indians which were with John Oldham, and one other Indian, came from Canonicus (the chief Sachem of the Narrhagansets) with a letter from Mr. Williams, to signify what had befallen John Oldham, and how grievously they were offended: and that Miantonimo (the second Sachem of the Narrhagansets) was gone with 17 canoes and 200 men to take revenge. But upon examination of the other Indian, who was brought prisoner to them, they found that all the Sachems of the Narrhagansets, except Canonicus and Miantonimo, were contrivers of John Oldham's death, and the occasion was because he went to make peace, and trade with the Pequods last year: The prisoner said also that Oldham's two Indians were acquainted with it; but because they were sent as messengers from Canonicus, they would not imprison them: But the governor wrote back to Mr. Williams to let the Narrhagansets know, they expected they should send home John Old.

ham's two boys, and take revenge upon the Islanders, and withal gave Mr. Williams caution to look to himself, if there should be occasion to make war with the Narrhagansets (for Block Island was under them) and the next day he wrote to Canonicus, by one of those Indians, that he had suspicion of him that was sent and yet he had sent him back, because he was a messenger: but did expect, if he should send for the said two Indians, he should send them to him.

Four days after John Oldham's two boys were sent home by one of Miantonimo's men, with a letter from Mr. Williams, that Miantonimo had caused the Sachem of Niantic to send to Block Island for them, and that he had near 100 fathom of peas, and much other goods of Oldham's which should be reserved for them. And three of the seven that were drowned were Sachems, and that one of the two which was hired by the Niantic Sachem, was dead also. So they wrote back to have the rest of those which were necessary to be sent, and the rest of the goods, and that he should tell Canonicus and Miantonimo that they held them innocent, but the six other Sachems were guilty.

Lieut. Gibbons and Mr. Higginson were sent after with Cushamakin the Sachem of the Massachusetts, to Canonicus, to treat with him about the murder of John Oldham. They returned with acceptance and good success of their business; observing in the Sachem much state, great command of his men, and marvelous wisdom in his answers; and in the carriage of the whole treaty clearing himself and his neighbours of the murder, and offering revenge of it, yet upon very safe and wary conditions.

The English of Massachusetts after the peace concluded with the Pequods, sent a bark thither for trade, that trial might be made of the reality of their friendship, but they found them treacherous and false, and that no advantage was to be had by any commerce with them, in so much as they took up a resolution never more to have to do with them; which the said Indians perceiving, made no account of the former peace, but took all advantage to do us mischief, not only by harbouring those who had murdered Mr. Oldham, but surprizing many of the English in the year 1636, when Connecticut river began first to be planted, divers of whom were killed (nine at one time in April, 1637) by them about Wethersfield, when the plantation then first began, so as they could not pass up and down the river without a guard, but they would be in danger of being cut off or carried away, as two maids were said to be; thirty men have been killed by them in all; those who fell into their hands alive, were cruelly tortured, after a most barbarous manner, by insulting over their prisoners in a blasphemous wise, when in their dying agonies under the extremity of their pains (their flesh being first flathed with knives, and then filled with burning embers) they called upon God and Christ with grasping groans, resigning up their souls into their hands; with which words these wretched caitifs used to mock the English afterward, when they came within their hearing and view.

About the same time some agents sent over by the Lord Say, and the Lord Brook, built a fort at the [mouth of Connecticut river, wherein was placed one Lieutenant Gardiner, and a convenient number of soldeirs to secure the place, intended soon after to be planted, but all the winter following, being the end of the year 1636, they were little better than besieged by the said savages, not daring to stir out of command of the fort, but they were ready to be seized by these their barbarous enemies. At one time the Lieutenant himself with ten or twelve of the soldiers, marching out of the fort, with intent to pass over a neck of land, to burn the marshes; as soon as they had passed over the streight of the neck, they espied a company of Indians making towards the said isthmus, which if they could not recover, they see they must all perish; whereupon returning back with all speed, they were narrowly escaped, and were two or three of them killed notwithstanding, before they could get back into the fort, which was presently surrounded with multitudes of them; but the discharging of a piece of ordinance gave them warning to keep further from the walls. Sometimes they came with their canoes into the river in view of the soldiers within the fort, and when they apprehended themselves out of reach of their guns, they would imitate the dying groans and invocations of the poor captive English soldiers were forced with silent patience to bear, not being then in a capacity to require their insolent blasphemies. But they being by these horrible outrages justly provoked to indignation, unanimously agreed to join their forces together, to root them out of the earth, with God's assistance.

The Governor and Council having soon after assembled the rest of the magistrates, and the ministers, to advise with them about doing justice for Oldham's death, they all agreed that it should be done with all expedition; and accordingly on the 25th of August following, 80 or 90 men were sent out under the command of Capt. Endicot of Salem, who went to the Pequod country by water, with commission to treat with the said Pequods, first offering terms of peace, if they would surrender the murderers of the English, and forbear further acts of hostility; or else fight them.

The Captain aforesaid coming ashore with his Company, by a message sent them by an interpreter, obtained little speech with a great number of them at a distance; but after they understood what was propounded to them, first cunningly getting behind a hill, they pref-

ently ran away into the woods and swamps, where there was no pursuing of them : however, one discharging a gun among them as they were taking their flight, stayed the course of one, which was all that could be done against them at that time.

Winter approaching, and, no encouragement presenting further to pursue them at that time, it was resolved better to return back for the present, and wait a further season, when more forces could be gathered together to pursue the quarrel to the utmost.

Miantonimo soon after sent a message to them with a letter from Mr. Williams, to signify that they had taken one of the Indians, who had broken prison, and had him safe for them, when they should send for him (as they had before sent to him for that end) and that the other had stolen away (not knowing it seems that he was their prisoner) and that according to their promise they would not entertain any of that Island, which should come to them ; but they conceived it was rather in love to him whom they concealed, for he had been his servant formerly, but when they sent for those two Indians, one was sent them, but the other was said to be dead before the messenger came : But the Pequods harboured those of Block-Island, and therefore justly brought the revenge of the English upon them.

Amongst those soldiers that were sent under Capt. Endicot, were twenty that belonged to Saybrook-fort, and were appointed to stay there, to defend the place against the Pequods: After the said Capt. and the rest] were departed, those twenty lay wind bound in the Pequod harbor, and in the mean while went all of them ashore, with sacks to fetch some of the Pequods corn; and having fetched each man one sack full to their boat, they returned for more, and having loaded themselves the Indians set upon them, so they laid down their corn, and gave fire upon the Indians, and the Indians shot their arrows against them; the place was open about the distance of a musket shot; the Indians kept the covert, save when they came forth one at a time and discharged their arrows: The English put themselves in a single file, and ten only that had pieces that could reach them, shot, the others stood ready to keep them from breaking in. So they continued most part of the afternoon; the English, as they supposed, killed divers of them, and hurt others; and the Indians wounded but one of the English, who was armed, all the rest being without: For they shot their arrows compass-wise, so as they could easily see and avoid them standing single, then always gathered up their arrows: At the last the Indians being weary of the sport, gave the English leave to retire to their boat.—This was in October. 1636.

About two days after, five men of Saybrook went up the river about four miles to fetch hay:

out of a meadow on the Pequod side : The grass was so high as some Pequods hiding themselves in it, set upon the English before they were aware, and took one that had hay on his back, the rest fled to their boat, one of them had five arrows in him, yet recovered : He that was taken was a goodly young man, whose name was Butterfield : whereupon the meadow was ever after called Butterfields meadow.

Icarus Icariis nomina dedit aquis.

About fourteen days after, six of the soldiers were sent out of the fort to keep an house which they had set up in a corn field, about two miles from the fort. Three of them went forth a fowling, which the Lieutenant had strictly forbidden, two had pieces, and the third only a sword, when suddenly about an hundred Indians came out of the covert and set upon them, he who had the sword brake through, and received only two shot, and those not dangerous, and so escaped to the house which was not above a bow shot off, and perswaded the other two to follow, but they stayed still, till the Indians came and took them, and carried them away with their pieces. Soon after they beat down the said house, and out houses, and hay stacks, and within a bow shot of the fort, killed a cow, and shot divers others, which came home with arrows sticking in them.

After Mr. Endicot's departure, the Pequods

perceiving that they had by several late injuries and outrages, drawn upon themselves the hatred of all the English, as well as of their own people by former wrongs, and distrusting their own ability to deal with them all at once, did at the last by all subtle insinuations & persuasions, try to make their peace with the Narrhagansets, using such arguments as to right reason seemed not only pregnant to the purpose but also (if revenge, that bewitching and pleasing passion of man's mind had not blinded their eyes) most cogent and invincible: but they were, by the good providence of God, withheld from embracing those counsels, which might otherways have proved most pernicious to the design of the English, viz. That the English were strangers, and began to overspread the country, which would soon be possessed by them to the depriving the ancient inhabitants of their right, if they were not timely prevented; and that the Narrhagansets would but make way for their own ruin, by helping to destroy the Pequods; for after themselves were subdued, it would not be long ere the Narrhagansets themselves, would in the next place be rooted out likewise: whereas if they would but join together against the English they could demonstrate how the English might easily either be destroyed or forced to leave the country, and that without any danger to themselves: Telling them also that they never need come to any open battles, they might destroy them only by firing their houses, and killing their cattle, and lying in wait for them as they went about their ordinary occasions; which course if it were pursued, they said their new and unwelcome neighbors could not long subsist; but would either be starved with hunger and cold, or forced to forsake the country.

Matchiavel himself if he had sat in council with them could not have insinuated stronger reasons to have persuaded them to a peace.

It is said that so much reason was apprehended in these motives, that the Narrhaganjets were once wavering, and were almost persuaded to have granted an ear to their advice and persuasion and joined all against the English; but when they considered what an advantage they had put into their hands by the strength and favor of the English, to take a full revenge of all their former injuries upon their inveterate enemies, the thought of that was so sweet, that it turned the scale against all other considerations whatsoever.

Soon after this, Miantonimo Sachem of the Narrhaganjets, came to Boston (being sent for by the Governor) with two of Canonicus's sons, and another Sachem, and near twenty of their men, whom they call Sannaps. The Governor, having notice by Cushamakin the Massachusetts Sachem, sent twenty musketeers to Roxbury to meet them. They came to Boston about noon, where the Governor had called together all the Magistrates and Ministers.

to give countenance to their proceedings, and to advise about the terms of peace. After dinner, Miantonimo declared what he had to say to them in several propositions, which were to this effect, that they had always loved the English, and now desired a firm peace with them, and that they would continue war with the Pequods, and their confederates, till they were subdued, and desired the English would do so too: Promising to deliver their enemies to them, or kill them, and two months after to send them a present. The Governor told them they should have an answer the next morning, which was done, upon articles subscribed by him, and they also subscribed with him, wherein a firm peace was concluded but because they could not make them well understand the articles, they told them they would send a copy of them to Mr. Williams, who could best interpret the same to them. So after dinner they took leave, and were conveyed out of town by some musketeers, and dismissed with a volley of shot.

The ARTICLES here follow.

I. A firm peace betwixt them and their friends on either part (if they consent) and their confederates (if they will observe the articles) and their posterity.

II. Neither part to make peace with the Pequods without the others consent.

III. Not to harbor any of the Pequods.

IV. To put to death, or deliver up any of the murderers of the English.

V. To return fugitive servants.

VI. The English to give them notice when they go out against the Pequods, and the other to send them guides.

VII. Free trade to be between them.

VIII. None of them to come near the English plantations during the war with the Pequods without some Englishman, or known Indian.

IX. To continue to the posterity of both parts.

These Articles were indifferently well observed by the Narrhagansets, till the Pequods their mortal enemies, were totally subdued; but then they began to grow insolent and treacherous, especially this Miantonimo himself; as will appear in the sequel.

Cushmanakin also the Sachem of the Massachusetts subscribed these articles with the English.

The report of the unheard of cruelties forementioned, which had been perpetrated by the Pequods filling the ears of the English throughout the country; it was agreed by the joint consent of the English throughout the three colonies to unite all their forces together for the suppressing the common enemy, early in the spring A. D. 1637, who were also moved thereunto by their own necessities as well as by the earnest request of their friends at Connecticut.

Those of Plymouth being written unto by the Governor of the Massachusetts, appeared very cordially willing thereunto, to which end they agreed to send fifty men at their own charge, with as much speed as the matter required, with sufficient leaders appointed, and a bark provided to carry them provisions, and tend upon them on all occasions ; but before they could be dispatched away the next spring, news was brought that the enemy was wholly routed, so as their journey was stopped, and their good will accepted for the deed ; as if they really had been there to have born their part in the service ; their non-appearance in time and place being not to be imputed to any backwardness in their minds, but to their too late invitation to the service ; the motion fetching a large compass from Connecticut down to the Massachusetts ; from whom in the last place they were solicited thereunto. And for the other two colonies, those of Connecticut being quickened on by the spur of necessity, and present sense of the insolency daily acted at their very doors, were soonest upon their march and by the good hand of God upon them, had given the main stroke before their friends of the Massachusetts could come up with them, yet was there no repining for the want of the glory of the victory, nor was there any cause, those that were the chief actors therein being forward to give God the glory of the whole, and not willing to pocket up any thing thereof themselves, acknowledging that they never saw more of God, or less of man in any business of that nature, as may more fully be understood by particulars ensuing.

The colony of the Massachusetts determined to send an hundred and sixty, of whom an hundred and twenty were ordered under the conduct of Capt. Patrick of Watertown, and Capt. Trask of Salem, Capt. Stoughton of Dorchester being to command in chief; with whom was sent that holy man of God, Mr. John Wilson, (pastor of the church of Boston) the chariots and horsemen of our Israel, by whose faith and prayer, as sometimes was said of Luther (in reference to Germany) the country was preserved, so as it was confidently believed that no enemy should break in upon a place whilst he survived, which as some have observed accordingly came to pass.

The matter requiring great expedition, and it being long before the whole company could be dispatched away, Capt. Patrick with forty men were sent beforehand, to be sure to meet with those of Connecticut in case they should be in action, before the rest of our forces could get into a readiness, which accordingly came to pass; for the main business in taking the fort was over, even before the said Patrick could get thither. Capt. Underhill was sent by Mr. Vane the Governor to Saybrook the winter before to strengthen the garrison there. The assaulting and surprizing of this Indian fort being the most remarkable piece of service in that whole expedition; take it as it was delivered in writing by that valliant, faithful and prudent commander, Capt. Mason, chief in the action, who lived long after to reap the fruit of his labor, and enjoy the benefit of that day's service, having an inheritance given him in that part of the country, as a just reward of his faithful service on that day as well as at other times. Wequash a Pequod by nation, but disgusted by the Sachem, proved a good guide to the English, by whose direction they were led to a fort near Mystick river, some miles nearer than Saffacous's fort, which they first intended to assault.

On the second Wednesday of May, being the tenth day of that month, we set sail with ninety men of the English in one Pink, one Pinnace, and two Boats, towards the Pequods, with seventy river Indians; having some what a long passage to Saybrook fort, about forty of our Indians desired to go down by land on Saturday, but on Monday they went forth from the fort, and meeting seven Pequods and Nianticks they slew five outright, took one prisoner, and brought him into Saybrook fort, where he was executed by Capt. Underhill, the other escaped.

On Monday we all landed at Saybrook fort, and stayed there untill Tuesday; Capt Underhill joining nineteen men with himself to us: Whereupon we sent back twenty of ours to strengthen our plantations; and so set sail on Thursday towards Narrhaganset, and arrived there on Friday.

On Saturday myself, with Capt. Underhill, and Lieut. Sealy, with our guard marched to Canonicus by land being about five miles distant, where we were kindly entertained after their manner: Having had party with him, we sent to Miantonimo, who would give no present answer; and so our Sabbath being on the morrow, we adjourned our meeting until Monday, at which time there assembled Miantonimo with the chiefest of them about two hundred men; and being solemnly set for consultation after their manner, told them we were now going, God assisting, to revenge the wrong committed and bloodshed by their and our enemies, upon our native countrymen, not any way desiring their aid, unless they would voluntarily send, which they did exceedingly approve of: Moreover we told them that the English and they had always been friends for ought we knew, and so we were with the Indians that had not wronged Englishmen, which they acknowledged, and so made a large description of the Pequods country, and told us they would send men with us; so we resolved there to keep our rendezvous at Canonicus his plantation on the morrow night being Tuesday; but the wind being stiff, we could not land our men untill five or six of the clock in the afternoon, at which time I landed on Narrhaganset shore with thirtytwo men, and so marched to the place of rendezvous formerly appointed: Capt. Underhill and my Lieut. landed the rest, and came up to me that night. About two hours before day came, an Indian with a letter from Capt. Patrick, being then at Mr. Robert Williams's plantation with forty men, who desired us to stay for his coming and joining us, not intimating when that would be: which being considered and debated, we thought it could not be our safest course to wait for him, (though his present assistance was much desired) for these reasons:

1. "Because the day before when we had absolutely resolved to go, the Indians plainly told us they thought we were but in jest, and also that Englishmen did talk much, but not fight; nay, they concluded that they would not go on; and besides if we should defer, we feared we should be discovered by reason of the frequent recourse between them by certain Squaws (who have mutual intercourse) whereupon we were constrained to set forward towards the Pequods, with seventy seven English, and about sixty river Indians, and as I suppose near about two hundred Narrhagansets, and marched that night to the eastern Nianticks, where we kept our rendezvous that night; the Sachem of the place adding about an hundred of his men unto us.

We set forward and marched about ten miles, where making an alta (or halt) there we held a consultation with the Indians, who desired to know what we intended? We told them that we resolved to assault Saffacous his fort, at which they were all stricken and as it were amazed with fear, as they plainly confessed; after a long debate and pressing of them, taxing them with cowardice, some of them resolved to go along with us, though I suppose they had no such intent, as appeared afterward; some of them left us to the number as I suppose of an hundred or less; and marching on five miles further, we made another alta, where they told us we had near a dozen miles to Saffacous his fort, as we gathered by their relation: Being very weary in travelling with our arms, ammunition and provision; we were constrained to alter our resolution, and resolved to attempt that fort, which they had formerly described to be three or four miles nearer; and also one of Capt. Underhill's men failing put it out of doubt. But whosoever saith that Capt. Underhill had any falling out about that or any thing else, doth speak untruth; for we both resolved to Saffacous his fort, as we concluded in our consultation at Narrhaganset, and so continued our resolution 'till we received the former reasons as grounds sufficient to persuade us to the contrary, and to prosecute that which was most likely to be accomplished.

They drew a plot of the situation of the Pequods and described Saffacous his fort to be the nearest; which was the chief cause we determined to assault that first, and had no reason leading till our last alta, where, upon the reasons formerly mentioned, we changed our resolution: This greatly pleased the Indians that were with us, as it was what they much desired; for it was dreadful to them to hear the name of Saffacous.

From thence we marched two or three miles where we kept our rendezvous, supposing we had been within one mile of the fort: An Indian sent to discover beforehand, brought us news that they were secure, having been fishing with many canoes at sea, and divers of them walking here and there.

About two hours before day we marched toward the fort, being weary and much spent; many of us having slept nothing at all.

And so we began to march towards the fort, the Lord being pleased wonderfully to assist and encourage us, after a tedious march of three or four miles: About break of day we came fair in view of the fort, standing on the top of an hill not steep; the Indians all falling back, were suddenly vanished out of sight, so we made an alta, and sent back for our guide who had promised to go with us to the fort, but his heart we saw much failed him; we asked him what they intended who promised to wing us, and to surround the fort; he told us they were much afraid ; but he, seeing our resolution went to them and prevailed with divers of them to come up to us ; we told them their best course would be to flank the fort on both sides, and having no time longer to confer, we proceeded ; Capt. Underhill to the western entrance with one division, myself with the other to the eastern as silent as possibly we could ; so it pleased God we came up within two rods of the Palisado, before we were discovered, at which time a dog began to bark, and an Indian cried out but not being myself rightly informed by the Indian guide, of the right entrance, though there was a little postern door, which I had thought to have attempted to break down with my foot ; but the Lord directed me otherwise for the better ; for I then feared we could not there enter with our arms, which proved true. So I suddenly hastened to the Palisado, and putting in the muzzle of my piece, discharged upon them, and so did the rest with all celerity ; we then suddenly hastened on toward that side which stood toward the water ; where I concluded was an entrance, and instantly fell upon it, being only barred with two great forked boughs, or branches, of some trees, and hastening over them I drew one after me : my Lieutenant drawing the other outward. We suddenly fell upon the wigwags ; the Indians cried out in a most hideous manner, some issuing out of the wigwags, shooting at us desperately, and so creeping under beds that they had. We had resolved awhile, not to have burned it, but being we could not come at them, I resolved to set it on fire, after divers of them were slain, and some of our men forewounded; so entering one of their wigwags, I took a fire brand (at which time an Indian drawing an arrow had killed him, but one Davis his Sergeant cut the bowstring with his cutlafs) and suddenly kindled a fire in the mats wherewith they were covered, and fell to a retreat and surrounded the fort; the fire increasing violently, insomuch as that they were constrained to climb to the top of the Palifado; from whence they were soon fetched down, I suppose to the number of an hundred and forty. Many of them issuing forth were suddenly slain either by the English or Indians, who were in a ring without us; all being dispatched and ended in the space of an hour, having two of our men slain, and sixteen wounded.

Being very hot and dry we could very hardly procure any water, we continued there one hour not knowing what course to take or which way to go, our Pinnaces not being come in, neither did we know how far, or which way to go to them, our interpreter, being an Indian, we could hardly come to speak with him: When we did, he knew nothing of what his countrymen intended, who were all hurried and distracted with a few hurt men, but chiefly as I conceive with fear of the enemy.

“But the enemy approaching they began to

clave unto us, and I verily think durst not leave us.

“ Our Pinnaces then coming in view with a fair gale, being guided as it were to serve our necessity by the good hand of God, which I think was never more eminently seen in a matter of like moment and less of man in several passages. Then we set our men in order and prepared for fight, and began to march toward the harbour where the Pinnaces were to ride : The enemy approaching, Capt. Underhill with divers Indians and certain English issued out to encounter them, but they would not stand to it, for the most part they lay behind rocks, trees and bushes. We marched on, they still dodging of us ; sometimes hazarding themselves in open field, where some of them were slain in open view, and as we hear many wounded : I was somewhat cautilous in bestowing many shot upon them needlessly, because I expected a strong opposition ; and thus they continued to follow us till we came within two miles of our Pinnaces, where they wholly left us, which was near six miles as I conceive, having then about two miles more to the river.

“ Four of our wounded men we were forced to carry ourselves, while at length we hired the Indians to bear them, both in this and all the following enterprizes against the pequods.”

This service being thus happily accomplished by these few hands that came from Connecticut ; within a while after, the forces sent from the Massachusetts under the conduct of Capt. Stoughton as commander in chief arrived there also, who found a great part of the work done to their hands, in the surprizal of the Pequods fort as aforesaid, which yet was but the breaking of the nest, and unkennelling those savage wolves ; for the body of them, with Sassacous the chief Sachem (whose very name was a terror to all the Narrhagansets) were dispersed abroad and scattered all over their country, yet so far were the rest dismayed, that they never durst make any assault upon the english, who in several parties were scattered about in pursuit of them.

It was not long after Capt. Stoughton's soldiers came up before news was brought of a great number of the enemy, that were discovered by the side of a river up the country, being first trappanned by the Narrhagansets, under pretence of securing them, but they were truly hemmed in by them, though at a distance, yet so as they could not, or durst not stir, from the place, by which means our forces of the Massachusetts had an easy conquest of some hundreds of them, who were there couped up as in a pound ; not daring to fight, not able to fly away, and so were all taken without any opposition : The men among them to the number of 30, were turned presently into Charon's ferryboat, under the command of skipper Gallop, who dispatched them a lit.

ble without the harbor ; the females and children were disposed of according to the will of the conquerors, some being given to the Narragansets, and other Indians that assisted in the service.

The rest of the enemy being first fired out of their strong hold, were taken and destroyed, a great number of them being seized in the places where they intended to have hid themselves, the rest fled out of their own country over Connecticut river, up towards the Dutch plantation. Our soldiers being resolved by God's assistance to make a final destruction of them, were minded to pursue them which way soever they should think to make their escape, to which end in the next place our soldiers went by water towards New Haven, whither they heard, and which in reason was most likely, they bent their course : soon after they were informed of a great number of them, that had betaken themselves to a neighboring place not far off, whither they might hope it was not likely they should be pursued ; but upon search they found fifty or sixty wigwams, but without any Indians in any of them, but heard that they had passed along toward the Dutch plantation : whereupon our soldiers that were before, all embarked for Quillepiack, afterwards called New Haven, and being landed there, they had not far to march unto the place where it was most probable they should either find or hear of them ; accordingly in their march they met here and there with fundry of them, whom they all flew or took prisoners, amongst whom were two Sachems, whom they presently beheaded; to a third that was either a Sachem or near a kin to one, they gave his life upon condition that he should go and enquire where Sassacous was, and accordingly bring them word; this Indian, overlooking all other national or natural obligations, in consideration of his life that was received on that condition, proved very true and faithful to those that sent him; his order was to have returned in three days, but not being able within so short a time to make a full discovery of the business, and also find a handsome way to escape, he made it eight day before he returned, in which something fell out not a little remarkable; for those he was sent to discover, suspecting at the last by his withdrawing himself, that he came for a spy, pursued after him, so as he was forced to fly for his life, and getting down to the sea side he accidentally met with a canoe a little before turned adrift, by which means he paddled by some shift or other so far out of the harbour, that making a sign he was discerned by some on board one of the vessels that attended on our soldiers, by whom being taken up he made known what he had discovered: But after he was gone, Sassacous suspecting (and not without just cause) what the matter was, made his escape from the rest with 20 or 30 of his men to the Mchawks, by whom himself and they that were with him, were all murdered afterward, being hired thereunto by the Narrhagansets, as was confidently affirmed and believed.*

Thus this treacherous and cruel villain with his companions, having against his faith and promise, as well as contrary to the laws of nature and nations, murdered several others, both of the Dutch and English nation, is in the same manner himself, against the laws of hospitality murdered by those to whom he fled for refuge. Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord I will repay it.

It is worthy our observation, that this Sassacus the chief Sachem of the Pequods, as afterwards Phillip of Mount hope, (both of them in their several times and places the contrivers of many bloody and cruel mischiefs, yet) escaped the hands of those whom they had so many ways provoked to the utmost degree of indignation, that so they might not too much gratify their own spirits in taking revenge; but it must be brought about by those means by which the glory of divine vengeance and justice shall more eminently shine forth, that it might be truly said of them as Adonibezek confessed of himself, As I have done, so God hath requited me.

But to return.

had made an escape, shifted every one for himself, leaving but three or four behind them (when a party of our soldiers according to the direction of him that was sent as a spy came upon the place) who would not or could not tell them whither their company were fled; but our soldiers ranging up and down as providence guided them, at the last, July 12, 1637, they lighted upon a great number of them, they pursued them to a small Indian town seated, by the side of an hideous swamp (near the place where Fairfield or Stratford now stands) into which they all slipt, as well Pequods as natives of the place, before our men could make any shot upon them, having placed a centinel to give warning, Mr. Ludlow and Capt. Mason with half a score of their men happened to discover this crew. Capt. Patrick and Capt Trask with about an hundred of the Massachusetts forces came in upon them presently after the alarm was given; such commanders as first happened to be there gave special orders that the swamp should be surrounded (being about a mile in compass) but Lieut. Davenport belonging to Capt. Trask's company, not hearing the word of command, with a dozen more of his company, in an over eager pursuit of the enemy, rushed immediately into the swamp, where they were very rudely entertained by those evening wolves that newly kennelled therein, for Lieut. Davenport was sorely wounded in the body, John Wedwood of Ipswich in the belly, and laid hold on by some of the Indians ; Thomas Sherman of said Ipswich in the neck ; some of their neighbors that ventured in with them were in danger of the enemy's arrows that flew very thick about them, others were in as much hazard of being swallowed by the miry boggs of the swamp, wherein they stuck so fast, that, if Serjeant Riggs of Roxbury had not rescued two or three of them, they had fallen into the hands of the enemy ; but such was the strength and courage of those that came to their rescue, that some of the Indians being slain with their swords, their friends were quickly relieved and drawn out of the mire and danger.

But the Indians of the place, who had for company sake run with their guests the Pequods into the swamp, did not love their friendship so well, as to be killed with them also for company sake, wherefore they began to bethink themselves that they had done no wrong to the English, and desired a parly, which was granted, and they presently understood one another by the means of Thomas Stanton an exact interpreter then at hand. Upon which the Sachem of the place with several others and their wives and children, that liked better to live quietly in their wigwams than to be buried in the swamp, came forth and had their lives granted them : After some time of further parly with these, the interpreter was sent in to offer the like terms to the rest, but they were possessed with such a spirit of stupidity and fullness that they resolved rather to sell their lives for what they could get there ; and to that end began to let fly their arrows thick against him as intending to make his blood some part of the price of their own ; but thro' the goodness of God toward him, his life was not to be sold on that account, he being presently fetched off.

By this time night drawing on, our commanders perceiving on which side of the swamp the enemies were lodged, gave orders to cut through the swamp with their swords, that they might the better hem them round in one corner, which was presently done, and so they were begirt in all night, the English in the circumference plying them with shot all the time, by which means many of them were killed and buried in the mire, as they found the next day. The swamp by the forementioned device being reduced to so narrow a compass, that our soldiers standing at twelve feet distance could surround it, the enemy kept in all the night ; but a little before day break (by reason of the fogg that useth to arise about that time, observed to be the darkest time, of the night) twenty or thirty of the lustiest of the enemy broke through the besiegers, and escaped away into the woods, some by violence and some by stealth cropping away, some of whom notwithstanding were killed in the pursuit ; the rest were left to the mercy of the conquerors, of which many were killed in the swamp like sullen dogs, that would rather in their selfwilledness and madness sit still to be shot or cut in pieces, than receive their lives for asking at the hand of those into whose power they were now fallen. Some that are yet living and worthy of credit do affirm, that in the morning entering into the swamp, they saw several heaps of them sitting close together, upon whom they discharged their piece, laden with ten or twelve pistol bullets at a time, putting the muzzels of their pieces under the boughs within a few yards of them; so as besides those that were found dead (near twenty it was judged) many more were killed and sunk into the mire and never were minded more by friend or foe; Of those who were not so desperate of or fullen to sell their lives for nothing, but yielded in time, the male children were sent to the Bermudas, of the females some were distributed to the English towns, some were disposed of among the other Indians, to whom they were deadly enemies as well as to ourselves.

This overthrow given to the Pequods struck such a terror into all the Indians in those parts (some of whom had been ill affected to the English before) that they sought our friendship, and rendered themselves to be under our protection, which they then obtained, and have never since forfeited it any of them till this late rebellion of Philip the subject of the following discourse. Amongst the rest of the prisoners special notice was taken of the wife of a noted Indian called Mononotto, who with her children submitted herself, or by the chance of the war fell into the hands, of the English: it was known to be by her meditation that two English maids (that were taken from Wethersfield upon Connecticut river) were saved from death in, requital of whose pity and humanity, the life of herself and her children was not only granted her, but she was in special recommended to the care of that honorable gentleman Mr. John Winthrop, for that time being the worthy Governor of the Massachusetts; who taking notice of her modest countenance and behaviour, as well as of her only request (not to suffer wrong either as to the honor of her body or fruit of her womb) gave special charge concerning her, according to his noble and christian disposition.

After his slaughter at the swamp, the Pequods being upon every turn exposed to the revenge of the Mohegins on one side, and the Narrhagansets on the English,* by whom they were put, some under the Mohegins and some under the Narrhagansets, which at last proved the occasion of the present quarrel as is conceived, through the ambition of Miantonimo, as will be hereafter related.

On the 12th of July, 1637, one Aganemo, a Sachem of the Niantick Indians (who were a branch of the Narrhagansets) came to Boston with seventy of his own men: he made divers propositions to the English, which they took into consideration, and promised to give him an answer the next day: But finding that he had rescued divers of the Pequods, submitting to him since the last defeat, they first demanded the delivery of them which he sticking at, they refused further conference with him: But the next morning he came and offered what they desired. So the Governor referred him to the Captains at the Pequod country, and gave it instructions to them how to deal with him. So receiving his ten fathoms of wampam, they friendly dismissed him.

In July 1638, Ucas the Sachem of the Mehigins having entertained some of the Pequods came to the Governor at Boston with a present, and was much dejected because it was not first accepted: But afterwards the Governor and Council being satisfied about his innocence, they accepted it, whereupon he promised to submit to the order of the English, both touching the Pequods he had received, and as concerning the differences betwixt the Narrhagansets and himself, and confirmed all with this compliment; this heart, said he, (laying his hand upon his heart) is not mine but your's, command me any difficult service and I will do it, I have no men but they are all your's, I will never believe any Indian against the English any more; and so he continued for ever after, as may be seen in the following transaction between the Indians and the English:

whereupon he was dismissed with some small reward, and went home very joyful carrying a letter of approbation for himself and his men, through the English plantations.

This was the issue of the Pequod war, which in the day of it here in New England was as formidable to the country in general as the present war with Philip; the experience of which, because it may administer much matter to comfort and encouragement to the surviving generation, as well as of praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God, from all those who have thus long quietly enjoyed the benefit and reaped the fruit of their labour and courage who engaged therein, the more pains hath been taken to search out the broken pieces of that story and thus put them together, before, the memory thereof was buried in the ruins of time, and past the recovery and knowledge of the present age.

After subduing the Pequods in the year 1637, the Narrhagansets the most numerous of the other Indians, either out of discontent, that the whole sovereignty over the rest of the Indians was not adjudged to belong to them or out of envy, that Uncas the chief Sachem of the Mohegin Indians, had insinuated further than themselves into the favor of the English were observed to be always contriving mischief against them, notwithstanding a firm agreement was made between the English and the said Narrhagansets in the year 1637, when they had helped to destroy the Pequods, and also notwithstanding the triple league between the said Narrhagansets, the Mohegins and the English at Hartford (the chief town of Connecticut) made in the year 1638, wherein the said Indians were solemnly engaged, not to quarrel with the Mohegins or any other Indians, until they had first asked the advice of the English, to whose determination, they had likewise obliged themselves to stand in all following differences among them. They carried it subtilly and underhand for some years, and were pretending quarrels with the said Uncas, against whom they always had an inveterate malice, ever since the agreement made about distributing the Pequods, after the war with them was ended expecting in all probability that all should have been left to their sole arbitrament. The Mohegins on the other side, though not so numerous, yet a more warlike people and more politic, always made their recourse to the English, complaining of the insolencies of the Narrhagansets, contrary to their league, so as they would hardly be kept from making open war against them, when they saw all other attempts to kill and destroy Uncas the Mohegin Sachem, by treachery, poison and sorcery, prove ineffectual. Insomuch that at last the malice of Miantonimo and his Narrhagansets grew to that height, that they began to plot against the English themselves, for defending of Uncas.

The Narrhagansets were animated by the haughty spirit and aspiring mind of Miantonimo the heir apparent of all the Narrhaganset people; after the decease of the old Sachem, Canonius; who was his uncle. This Miantonimo was a very goodly personage, of tall stature, subtil and cunning in his contrivements, as well as haughty in his designs. It was strongly suspected that in the year 1642, he had contrived to draw all the Indians throughout the country into a general conspiracy against the English: For, the first of September, 1642, letters came to Boston from the Court at Connecticut, and from two of the Magistrates there, that the Indians had conspired to cut off the English all over the country: Mr. Ludlow certified so much from the place where he lived near the Dutch. The time appointed to be for the assault, was said to be after harvest; the manner to be by several companies, entering into the chief men's houses, by way of trade, and then to kill them in their houses, and seize their arms and others should be at hand to prosecute the massacre: This was also confirmed by three Indians that were said to reveal it in the same manner, and at the same time, to Mr. Ludlow and to the Governor of New Haven. It was added also that another Indian should discover the same plot to Mr. Haines of Connecticut by some special circumstances, viz. that being much hurt by a cart (which usually there are drawn with oxen) he should send for Mr. Haines and tell him, that Englishman's God was angry with him, and sent Englishman's cow (meaning the oxen in the cart, or wayne) to kill him, because he had concealed a plot against the English, and so told him all as the other Indians had done.

Upon this, their advice from Connecticut was, that we should begin with them, and enter upon a war presently, and that if the Massachusetts would send 120 men to Saybrook, at the river's mouth, they would meet them with a proportionable number. This was a very probable story, and very likely it was, that the Indians had been discoursing of some such business among themselves. But the General Court of the Massachusetts when called together, did not think those informations to be a sufficient ground whereon to begin a war. Although the governor and Magistrates as many as could convene together before the Court, ordered that all the Indians within their Jurisdiction should be disarmed, which they willingly yield unto. And upon all the enquiries and examinations which were made by the Court when assembled together, they could not find any such violent presumption of a conspiracy, as to be the ground of a war. Besides, it was considered, that the reports of all Indians were found by experience to be very uncertain, especially when it may be raised and carried by such as are at variance one with another; who may be very live to accuse one another to ingratiate themselves with the English. Mi-

antonimo, Sachem of Narrhaganfet, was sent unto, and by his readiness to appear, satisfied the English that he was innocent as to any present conspiracy; though his quarrel with the Mohegins (who bordered upon Connecticut colony) might very probably, as was judged, render him the subject of such a report, or an occasion of it.

The said Miantonimo when he came before the Court peremptorily demanded that his accusers might be brought before him face to face, and if they could not prove it, then to be made to suffer, what himself if he had been found guilty had deserved, i. e. death, his reasons for which were very plausible. He urged very much the prosecuting such a law against his accusers; alledging, that if the English did not believe it, why did they disarm the Indians round about: And if they did believe it, equity required, that they who accused him should be punished according to the offence charged upon himself. He offered also to make it good against Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegins that the report was raised either by him or some of his people. The English answered, that divers Indians had robbed some of the Englishmen's houses, which might be a sufficient ground to disarm; and with that he was something satisfied. The Connecticut men were hardly prevailed with to forbear the war against them, but at last they were overcome with the allegations of the Massachusetts to lay it aside.

Miantonimo when he was at Boston was very deliberate in his answers, shewing a good understanding in the principles of justice and equity, as well as a seeming ingenuity withal: But though his words were smother, than oil, yet, as many conceived, in his heart were drawn swords. It was observed also, that he would never speak but when some of his Counsellors were present, that they might, as he said bear witness of all his speeches at their return home.

They spent two days in the treaty, wherein at last he gave them satisfaction in all things, though he held off long about the Nianticks, of whom he said they were as his own flesh, engaging on their behalf, that if they should do any wrong, so as neither he nor they could satisfy without blood, then he would leave them to the mercy of the English. At his departure he gave his hand to the Governor, telling him, that was for the Magistrates that were absent.

While he was at Boston one of his own followers had been a principal evidence against him; he however promised to deliver him to the Mohegin Sachem whose subject he was; notwithstanding which promise, going homeward he cut off his head to prevent his telling more tales. And with great discontent as he was going home said he would come no more to Boston, wherein he proved a truer prophet than he himself believed when he uttered the words, for in the end of the same year, 1643 making war upon Uncas, he was taken prisoner by him, and soon after by the advice of the Commissioners of the four colonies (at that time firmly united into a league offensive and defensive, on which account they were after that time called the united colonies of New-england; though since that time they are reduced to but three colonies; that of New-haven and Connecticut by the last patent being united in one) his head was cut off by Uncas, it being justly feared, that there would never be any firm peace, either betwixt the English and the Narrhagansets, or betwixt the Narrhagansets and the Mohegins, while Miantonimo was left alive: However, the Narrhagansets have ever since that time bore an implacable malice against Uncas, and all the Mohegins, and for their sakes secretly against the English, so far as they durst discover it.

In the year 1645 and 1646, they grew so insolent, that the Commissioners of the united colonies were compelled to raise forces to go against them, but when they perceived that the English were in good earnest, they began to be afraid, and sued for peace, and submitted to pay tribute to satisfy for the charge of preparation for the war, but were always very backward to make payment until the English were forced to demand it by new forces, so that it appeared they were unwillingly willing to hold any friendly correspondence with the English, yet durst they never make any open attempt upon them, until the present rebellion, wherein they had no small hand, is too, too evident, notwithstanding all their pretences to the contrary, as will appear in the sequel of this history.

Thus it is apparent upon what terms the English stood with the Narrhagansets, ever since the cutting off Miantonimo, their chief Sachem's head by Uncas, it being done with the advice and counsel of the English, Anno 1643. As for the rest of the Indians, ever since the suppression of the Pequods in the year 1637, until the year 1675, there was always in appearance amity and good correspondence on all sides, scarce an Englishman was ever known to be assaulted or hurt by any of them, until after the year 1671, when the son of one Matoonas, who as was supposed, being vexed in his mind that the design against the English, intended to begin 1671, did not take place, out of meer malice and spite against them, slew an Englishman traveling along the road, the said Matoonas being a Nipnet Indian, which Nipnets were under the command of the Sachem of Mount Hope, the author of all the present mischiefs.

Upon a due enquiry into all præceeding transactions between the Indians and the English, from their first settling in these coasts there will appear no ground of quarrel that any of them had against the English, nor any provocation upon one account or another; for when Plimouth colony was first planted, within three months after their first landing, March 16, 1620, Massasoit, the chief Sachem of all that side of the country, repaired to the English at Plimouth, and entered into a solemn league upon sundry articles, (printed in New England's Memorial, 1669) which are as follows, viz.

1. That neither he nor any of his should injure or do hurt to any of their people.

2. That if any of his did any hurt to any of theirs, he should send the offender that they might punish him.

3. That if any thing were taken away from any of theirs, he should cause it to be restored; and they should do the like to his.

4. That if any did unjustly war against him, they should aid him, and if any did war against them, he should aid them.

5. That he should send to his neighbour confederates, to certify them of this, that they might not wrong them, but might likewise be comprised in these conditions of peace.

6. That when his men came to them upon any occasion, they should leave their arms (which were then bows and arrows) behind them.

7. That so doing, their sovereign Lord King James would esteem him as their friend and ally.

This league the same Sachem, September 24 1630, a little before his death, coming with his eldest son, afterward called Alexander, did renew with the English at the Court of Plimouth, for himself and his son, and their heirs and successors : And after that he came to Mr. Brown's, who lived not far from Mount Hope, bringing his two sons, Alexander and Philip with him, desiring there might be love and amity after his death, between, his sons and them as there had been betwixt himself and them in former times : Yet it is very remarkable, that this Massasoit, called also Woosamequen (how much soever he affected the English, yet) was never in the least degree well affected to the religion of the English, but would in his last treaty with his neighbors at Plimouth, when they were with him about purchasing some land at Swanzey, have had them engaged never to attempt to draw away any of his people from their old pagan superstition, and devilish idolatry, to the christian religion, and did much insist upon it till he saw the English were resolved never to make any treaty with him more upon that account, which when he discerned, he did not further urge it : but that was a bad omen that notwithstanding whatever his humanity were to the English, as they were strangers, (for indeed they had repayed his former kindness to them, by protecting him afterwards against the insolencies of the Narrhagansets) he manifested no small displacency of spirit against them, as they were christians: which strain was evident more in his son that succeeded him, and all his people, insomuch that some discerning persons of that jurisdiction have feared that nation of Indians would all be rooted out, as is since come to pass. The like may be observed concerning the Narrhagansets, who were always more civil and courteous to the English than any of the other Indians, though never as yet received the least tincture of christian religion, but have in a manner run the same fate with their neighbours of Mount Hope there being very few of them left standing. Nor is it unworthy the relation, what a person of quality amongst us hath of so late affirmed, viz. One much conversant with the Indians about Merimack river, being Anno 1660, invited by some Sagamores or Sachems to a great dance, (which solemnities are the times they make use of to tell their stories, and convey the knowledge of some past and most memorable things to posterity) Passaconaway, the great Sachem of that part of the country, intending at that time to make his last and farewell speech to his children and people, that were then all gathered together, addressed himself to them in this manner:

“ I am now going the way of all flesh, or ready to die, and not likely to see you ever met together any more: I will now leave this word of counsel with you, that you may take heed

how you quarrel with the English, for though you may do them much mischief, yet absurdly you will all be destroyed, and rooted off the earth if you do; for, I was as much an enemy to the English, at their first coming into these parts, as any one whatsoever, and did try all ways and means possible to have destroyed them, at least to have prevented them sitting down here, but I could no way effect it, therefore I advise you never to contend with the English, nor make war with them." And accordingly his eldest son Wonnalancet by name, as soon as he perceived that the Indians were up in arms, withdrew himself into some remote place, that he might not be hurt by the English, or the enemies, or be in danger by them.

This passage was thought fit to be inserted here, it having so near an agreement with the former, intimating some secret awe of God upon the hearts of some of the principal amongst them, that they durst not hurt the English, although they bare no good affection to their religion, wherein they seem not a little to imitate Ballaam, who whatever he uttered, when he was under the awful power of divine illumination, yet when left to himself, was as bad an enemy to the Israel of God as ever before.

But to return.

After the death of this Woosamequen, or Masfasoit, his eldest son succeeded him about 20 years since, Alexander by name, who notwith, standing the league he had entered into with the English, together with his father, in the year 1639, had neither affection to the Englishmen's persons; nor yet to their religion, but had been plotting with the Narrhagansetts to rise against the English; of which the Governor and Council of Plimouth being informed, they presently sent for him to bring him to the Court; the person to whom that service was committed, was a prudent and resolute gentleman, the present Governor of the said colony, who was neither afraid of danger, nor yet willing to delay in a matter of that moment, he forthwith taking eight or ten stout men with him well armed, intended to have gone to the said Alexander's dwelling, distant at least forty miles from the Governor's house, but by a good providence, he found him whom he went to seek at an hunting-house, within six miles of the English towns, where the said Alexander with about eighty men were newly come in from hunting and had left their guns without doors, which Major Winslow with his small company wisely seized, and conveyed away, and then went into the wigwam, and demanded Alexander to go along with him before the Governor, at which message he was much appalled, but being told by the undaunted messenger, that if he stirred or refused to go he was a dead man; he was by one of his chief Counsellors, in whose advice he most confided, persuaded to go along to the Governor's house, but such was the pride and height of his spirit, that the very surprizal of him, so raised his choler and indignation; that it put him into a fever, which notwithstanding all possible means that could be used, seemed mortal; whereupon entreating those that held him prisoner, that he might have liberty to return home, promising to return again if he recovered, and to send his son as hostage till he could so do; on that consideration he was fairly dismissed, but died before he got half way home. Here let it be observed, that, although some have taken up false reports as if the English had compelled him to go further or faster than he was able, and so he fell into a fever, or as if he were not well used by the Physician that looked to him, while he was with the English, all which are notoriously false; nor is it to be imagined that a person of so noble a disposition as is that gentleman (at that time employed to bring him) should himself, or suffer, any else to be uncivil to a person allied to them, by his own, as well as his father's league, as the said Alexander also was; nor was any thing of that nature ever objected to the English of Plimouth, by the said Alexander's brother, by name Philip commonly for his ambitious and haughty spirit nicknamed King Philip, when he came in the year 1662, in his own person with Sausaman his Secretary and chief Counsellor to renew the former league that had been between his predecessors and the English of Plimouth: But there was as much correspondence betwixt them for the next seven years as ever had been in any former times. What can be imagined therefore, besides the instigation of Satan, that envied at the prosperity of the church of God here seated, or else fearing lest the power of the Lord Jesus, that had overthrown his kingdom in other parts of the world, should do the like here, and so the stone taken out of the mountain without hands, should become a great mountain itself, and fill the whole earth; no cause of provocation being given by the English! For once before this, in the year 1671, the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning, had so filled the heart of this savage miscreant with envy and malice against the English, that he was ready to break out in open war against the inhabitants of Plimouth, pretending some trifling injuries done him in his planting land, but when the matter of controversy came to be heard divers of the Massachusetts Colony yea, when he himself came to Boston, as it were referring his case to the judgment, of that colony, nothing of that nature could be made to appear, whereupon in way of submission, he was of necessity by that evident conviction forced to acknowledge that it was the naughtiness of his own heart, that put him upon that rebellion, and nothing of any provocation from the English; and to a confession of this nature with a solemn renewal of this covenant, declaring his desire, that this covenant might res-

tify to the world against him, if ever he should prove unfaithful to those of Plimouth, or any other of the English colonies therein, himself with his chief Counsellors subscribed in the presence of some messengers sent on purpose to hear the difference between Plimouth and the said Philip. But for further satisfaction of the reader, the said agreement and submission shall here be published.

“TAUNTON, April 10th, 1671.

“Whereas my father, my brother and myself have formerly submitted ourselves and our people unto the King's Majesty of England, and to this colony of New Plimouth, by solemn covenant under our hand; but I having of late through my indiscretion, and the naughtiness of my heart violated and broken this my covenant with my friends, by taking up arms, with evil intent against them, and that groundlessly; I being now deeply sensible of my unfaithfulness and folly, do desire at this time solemnly to renew my covenant with my ancient friends, and my father's friends above mentioned, and do desire this may testify to the world against me if ever I shall again fail in my faithfulness towards them (whom I have now and at all times found kind to me) or any other of the English colonies; and as a real pledge of my true intentions, for the future to be faithful and friendly, I do freely engage to resign up unto the government of New Plimouth, all my English arms, to be kept by them for their secu-city, so long as they shall see reason. For true performance of the premises I have hereunto set my hand together with the rest of my Council.

The Mark P. of Phillip,
chief Sachem of Pokanoket,

In presence of
WILLIAM DAVIS The Mark V. of Tavoser,
WILLIAM HUDSON, The Mark M. of Capt. Wispoke,
THOMAS BRATTLE. The Mark T. of Woonkaponchunt,
The Mark S. of Nimrod."

Philip also in the same year signed the following ARTICLES.

1. "We Philip and my Council and my subjects, do acknowledge ourselves subject to his Majesty the King of England, and the government of New Plimouth, and to their laws.

2. "I am willing and do promise to pay unto the government of Plimouth, one hundred pounds in such things as I have : But I would intreat the favor that I might have three years to pay it in, for as much as I cannot do it at present.

3. "I do promise to send unto the Governor, or whom he shall appoint, five wolves heads, if I can get them : Or, as many as I can procure, until they come to five wolves yearly.

4. "If any difference fall between the English and myself, and people, then I do promise to repair to the Governor of Plimouth, to rectify the difference amongst us.

5. "I do promise not to make war with any, but with the Governor's approbation of Plimouth.

6. "I promise not to dispose of any of the lands that I have at present, but by the approbation of the Governor of Plimouth.

"For the true performance of the said Sachem, Philip of Paukamakett, do hereby bind myself and such of my Council, as are present, ourselves, our heirs, our successors, faithfully, and do promise, in witness thereof, we have hereunto subscribed our hands, the day and year above written."

In the presence of the Court and divers of the Magistrates and other gentlemen of the Massachusetts and Connecticut.	The Mark P. of Philip, the Sachem of Pokanoket, The Mark [of Uncomdaen, The Mark † of Wocokem, The Mark 7 of Samkama,"

To which, for the further clearing the justice of the present war, the result of the debate of the Commissioners of the united colonies about the matter of the war shall be here inserted.

At a meeting of the Commissioners of the united colonies held at Boston, September 9th, 1675.

"We having received from the Commissioners of Plimouth a Narrative, shewing the rise and several steps of that colony, as to the present war with the Indians, which had its beginning there, and its progress into the Massachusetts, by their insolencies and outrages, murdering many persons, and burning their houses in sundry plantations in both colonies. And having duly considered the same; do declare that the said war be both just and necessary, and its first rise only a defensive war. And therefore we do agree and conclude that it ought to be jointly prosecuted by all the united colonies ; and the charges thereof to be born and paid as is agreed in the articles of confederation.

JOHN WINTHROP,
JAMES RICHARDS,
THOMAS DANFORTH,
WILLIAM STOUGHTON,
JOSIAH WINSLOW,
THOMAS HINCKLEY."

But whatever his submission was before, or his subjecting himself and his people to our King, or his engagement to pay a sum of money in part of the charges then occasioned by him (and notwithstanding the English in or about Plimouth, since, or before that time were never any ways injurious unto him, or any of his people) all which are fully declared in a Narrative given by the Commissioners of the colony of Plimouth, wherein they also signify that the settlement and issue of the former controversy between Philip and them, was obtained and made (principally) by the mediation, and interposed advice and counsel of the other two confederate colonies, and also in a letter under the Governor's hand, in the following words :

"I think I can clearly say, that before these present troubles broke out, the English did not possess one foot of land in this colony, but what was fairly obtained by honest purchase of the Indian proprietors: Nay, because some of our people are of a covetous disposition, and the Indians are in the straits easily prevailed with to part with their lands, we first made a law that none should purchase or receive of gift, any land of the Indians without the knowledge and allowance of our Court, and penalty of a fine, five pounds per acre, for all that should be so bought or obtained. And lest yet they should be streightened, we ordered that Mount Hope, Pocasset, and several other necks of the best land in the colony, because most suitable and convenient for them, should never be bought out of their hands, or else they would have sold them long since. And our neighbors at Rehoboth and Swanzy, although they bought their lands fairly of this Philip and his father and brother, yet because of their vicinity, that they might not trespass upon the Indians, did at their own cost set up a very substantial fence quite across that great neck between the English and the Indians, and payed due damage if at any time any unruly horse or other beasts broke in and trespassed.

And for divers years last past (that all occasion of offence in that respect might be prevented) the English agreed with Philip and his, for a certain sum yearly to maintain the said fence, and secure themselves. And if at any time they have brought complaints before us, they have had justice impartial and speed.

dily, so that our own people have frequently complained, that we erred on the other hand in shewing them over much favor.

Marshfield May

JOS. WINSLOW."

1, 1676.

Yet did this treacherous and perfidious ca-tiff still harbour the same or more mischievous thoughts against the English than ever before, and hath been since that time plotting with all the Indians round about, to make a general insurrection against the English in all the colonies which, as some prisoners lately brought in have confessed, should have been put in execution at once, by all the Indians rising as one man, against all those plantations of English, which were next to them. The Narrha- gansets having promised, as was confessed, to rise with four thousand fighting men in the spring of this present year, 1676. But by the occasion hereafter to be mentioned about Sau-saman, Philip was necessitated for the safety of his own life to begin his rebellion the year before, when the design was not fully ripe.
Yet some are ready to think, that if his own life had not now been in jeopardy by the guilt of the murder of the aforesaid Sausaman, his heart might have failed him, when it should have come to be put in execution, as it did before in the year 1671, which made one of his Captains, of far better courage and resolution than himself, when he saw his cowardly temper and disposition, sling down his arms, calling him-

white livered cur, or to that purpose, and saying that he would never own him again, or fight under him; and from that time hath turned to the English, and hath continued to this day a faithful and resolute soldier in their quarrel.

That the Indians had a conspiracy amongst themselves to rise against the English, is confirmed by some of the Indians about Hadley although the plot was not come to maturity when Philip began, the special providence of God therein overruling the contrivers: For when the beginning of the troubles first was reported from Mount Hope, many of the Indians were in a kind of a maze, not knowing well what to do, sometimes ready to stand for the English, as formerly they had been wont to do; sometimes inclining to strike in with Philip (which at the last they generally did) which if it had been foreseen, much of that mischief might have been prevented that fell out in several places, more by perfidious and treacherous dealing than any other ways; the English never imagining that after so many obliging kindnesses received from them by the Indians, besides their many engagements and protestations of friendship, as formerly, they would have been so ungrateful, perfidiously false and cruel, as they have since proved.

The occasion of Philip's so sudden taking up arms the last year was this—there was one John Saufaman a very cunning and plausible Indian well skilled in the English language, and bred up in a profession of the christian religion employed as a schoolmaster at Natic, the Indian town, who upon some misdemeanor fled from his place to Philip, by whom he was entertained in the room and office of a Secretary, and his chief Counsellor, whom he trusted with all his affairs and secret counsels: But afterwards, whether upon the sting of his own conscience, or by the frequent solicitations of Mr. Eliot, that had known him from a child and instructed him in the principles of our religion, who was often laying before him the heinous sin of his apostacy, and returning back to his old vomit he was at last prevailed with to forsake Philip, and returned back to the christian Indians at Natick where he was baptized manifesting public repentance for all his former offences, and made a serious profession of the christian religion: and did apply himself to preach to the Indians, wherein he was better gifted than any other of the Indian nation; so as he was observed to conform more to the English manner than any other Indian; yet having occasion to go up with some others of his countrymen to Namasket; (now Middleborough) whether for the advantage of fishing, or some such occasion, it matters not; being there not far from Philip's country, he had occasion to be much in the company of Philip's Indians, and of Philip himself; by which means he discerned by several circumstances, that the Indians were plotting anew against us ; which out of faithfulness to the English, the said Sau-saman informed the Governor of, adding also,

that if it were known that he revealed it, he knew they would presently kill him. There appearing so many concurrent testimonies from others, making it the more probable, that there was a certain truth in the information, some enquiry was made into the business, by examining Philip himself, and several of his Indians, who although they would say nothing, yet could not free themselves from just suspicion. Philip therefore soon after contrived the said Sausaman's death, which was strangely discovered, notwithstanding it was so cunningly effected, for they that murdered him met him upon the ice on a great pond, and presently after they had knocked him down, put him under the ice, yet leaving his gun and hat upon the ice, that it might be thought he fell in accidentally through the ice and was drowned :
but being missed by his friends, who finding his hat and gun, they were thereby led to the place, where his body was found under the ice, When they took him up to bury him, some of his friends, particularly one David, observed some bruises about his head, which made them suspect he was first knocked down before he was put into the water, however, they buried him near about the place where he was found,
without making any further enquiry at present : nevertheless David his friend, reported these things to some English at Taunton (a town not far from Namasket) which occasioned the Governor to enquire further into the business; wisely considering, that as Sausaman had told him if it were known that he had revealed any of their plots, they would murder him for his pains : wherefore, by special warrant the body of Sausaman being digged again out of his grave, it was very apparent that he had been killed and not drowned. And by a strange providence, an Indian was found, that by accident standing unseen upon a hill, had seen them murdering the said Sausaman, but durst never reveal it for fear of losing his own life likewise, until he was called to the Court at Plimouth, or before the Governor where he plainly confessed what he had seen. The murderers being apprehended, were convicted by his undeniable testimony, and other remarkable circumstances, and so were all put to death, being three in number ; the last of them confessed immediately before his death, that his father (one of the Counsellors and special friends of Philip) was one of the two that murdered Sausaman, himself only looking on. This was done at Plimouth Court, held in June 1675, insomuch that Philip apprehending the danger his own head was in next, never used any further means to clear himself from what was like to be laid to his charge, either about his plotting against the English, nor yet about Sausaman's death ; but by keeping his men continually about him in arms, and gathering what strangers he could to join with him, marching up and down constantly in arms, both all the while the Court sat, as well as afterwards. The English of Plimouth hearing of all this, yet took no further notice than only to order a military watch in all the adjacent towns, hoping that Philip, finding himself not likely to be arraigned by order of the said Court, the present cloud might blow over as some others of like nature had done before : but in conclusion, the matter proved otherwise, for Philip finding his strength daily increasing by flocking of neighbor Indians unto him, and sending over their wives and children to the Narrhagansets for security (as they use to do when they intend war with any of their enemies) they immediately began to alarm the English at Swanzy (the next town to Philip's country) as it were daring the English to begin ; at last their insolencies grew so much an height, that they began not only to use threatening words to the English, but also to kill their cattle and rife their houses ; whereat an Englishman was so provoked, that he let fly a gun at an Indian, but did only wound, not kill him ; whereupon the Indians immediately began to kill all the English they could, so as on the 24th of June 1675, was the alarm of war first sounded in Plimouth colony, when eight or nine of the English were slain in and about Swanzy ; they first making a shot at a company of English.

as they returned from the assembly where they were met in a way of humiliation on that day, whereby they killed one and wounded others and then likewise at the same time, they flew two men on the high way, sent to call a surgeon; and the same day barbariously murdered six men in and about a dwelling house in another part of the town; all which outrages were committed so suddenly, that the English had no time to make any resistance: For on the 14th day of the same month, besides endeavors used by Mr. Brown of Swanzy, one of the Magistrates of Plymouth jurisdiction, an amicable letter was sent from the Council of Plymouth to Philip shewing their dislike of his practices, and advising him to dismiss his strange Indians, and not suffer himself to be abused by false reports, concerning them that intended him no hurt; but no answer could be obtained, otherwise than threatening of war, which it was hoped might have been prevented, as heretofore it had been, when things seemed to look with as bad a face as they then did. However, the Governor and Council, of Plymouth, understanding that Philip continued in his resolution, and manifested no inclination to peace they immediately sent up what forces they could to secure the towns thereabouts, and make resistance as occasions might be; and also dispatched away messengers to the Massachusetts Governor and Council, letting them know the state of things about Mount Hope, and desiring their speedy assistance ; upon which care was immediately taken with all expedition to send such supplies as were desired : But in the mean time two messengers were dispatched to Philip, to try whether he could not be diverted from his bloody enterprize, so to have prevented the mischief since fallen out, hoping, that as once before, viz. in the year 1671, by their mediation, a stop was put to the like tragedy, so the present war might by the same means have been now turned aside : For in the said year Philip had firmly engaged himself, when he was at Boston, not to quarrel with Plimouth until he had first addressed himself to the Massachusetts for advice and approbation : But the two messengers aforesaid, finding the men slain in the road June 24, as they were going for the surgeon, apprehended it not safe to proceed any further, considering also, that a peace now could not honorably be concluded after such barbarous outrages committed upon some of the neighbour colony : Wherefore returning with all speed to Boston, the Massachusetts forces were dispatched away with all imaginable haste, as the exigence of the matter did require, some of them being then upon, or ready for their march, the rest were ordered to follow after, as they could be raised. The sending forth of which, because it was the first engagement in any warlike preparations against the Indians shall be more particularly related.

On the 26th of June, a foot company under Captain Daniel Henchman, with a troop under Captain Thomas Prentice, were sent out of Boston toward Mount Hope : It being late in the afternoon before they began to march, the central eclipse of the moon in Capric, happened in the evening before they came up to Naponset river, about twenty miles from Boston, which occasioned them to make a halt, for a little repast, till the moon recovered her light again. Some melancholy fancies would not be persuaded, but that the eclipse falling out at that instant of time was ominous, conceiving also that in the centre of the moon they discerned an unusal black spot, not a little resembling the scalp of an Indian : As others not long before, imagined they saw the form of an Indian bow, accounting that likewise ominous (although the mischief following was done by guns, and not by bows) both the one and the other, might rather have thought of what Marcus Crassus the Roman General, going forth with an army against the Parthians, once wisely replied to a private foldier, that would have dissuaded him from marching that time, because of an eclipse of the moon in Capricorn, that he was more afraid of Sagitaris than of Capricornus, meaning the arrows of the Parthians (accounted very good archers) from whom as things then fell out, was his greatest danger. But after the moon had waded through the dark shadow of the earth, and borrowed her light again, by the help thereof, the two companies marched on toward Woodcock's house, thirty miles from Boston, where they arrived next morning ; and there retarded their motion till the afternoon, in hope of being overtaken by a company of volunteers, under the command of Captain Samuel Mosely, which accordingly came to pass, so as on June 20th, they all arrived at Swanzy, where by the advice of Capt. Cudworth the commander in chief of Plimouth focces, they were removed to the head quarters which for that time were appointed at Mr. Miles's house, the Minister of Swanzy, within a quarter of a mile of the bridge, leading into Philip's lands. They arriving there some little time before night, twelve of the troops unwilling to loose time passed over the bridge, for discovery into the enemies territories, where they found the rude welcome of eight or ten Indians firing upon them out of the bushes, killing one William Hammond, wounding Corporal Belcher, his horse being also shot down under him ; the rest of the said troopers having discharged upon those Indians that run away after their first shot, carried off their two dead and wounded companions, and so retired to their main guard for that night pitching in a barricado about Mr. Miles's house. The enemy thought to have braved it out by a bold assault or two at the first ; but their hearts soon began to fail them when they perceived the Massachusetts and Plimouth forces both engaged them : For the next morning they shouted twice or thrice, at half a mile's distance, and nine or ten of them shewing themselves on this side of the bridge, our horsemen with the whole body of the volunteers under Capt Mosely, not at all daunted by such kind of alarms, not willing so to loose the bridge ran violently down upon them over the said bridge, pursuing them a mile and a quarter on the other side : Ensign Savage, that young martial spark, scarce twenty years of age, had at that time one bullet lodged in his thigh, another shot through the brim of his hat, by ten or twelve of the enemy discharging upon him together, while he boldly held up his colours in the front of his company : But the weather not suffering any further action at that time, those that were thus far advanced, were compelled to retreat, back to the main guard, having first made a shot upon the Indians as they ran away into a swamp near by, whereby they killed five or six of them, as was understood soon after at Narraganset : This resolute charge of the English forces upon the enemy made them quit their place on Mount Hope that very night, where Philip was never seen after ; till the next year when he was by a divine mandate sent back ; there to receive the reward of his wickedness where he first began his mischief : The next day Major Savage that was to command in chief over the Massachusetts forces being come up with other supplies, about six o'clock over night the whole body intended to march into Mount Hope, and there beat up the enemy's quarters, or give him battle, if he durst abide it : But the weather being doubtful, our forces did not march till near noon, about which time they set out, with a troop of horse in each wing, to prevent the danger of the enemy's ambuscadoes ; after they had marched about a mile and a half, they passed by some houses newly burned : Not far off one of them they found a bible newly torn, and the leaves scattered about by the enemy, in hatred of our religion therein revealed ; two or three miles further they came up with some heads, scalps, and hands cut off from the bodies of some of the English, and stuck upon poles near the highway, in that barbarous and inhuman manner bidding us defiance ; the commander in chief giving order that those monuments of the enemy's cruelty should be taken, down, and buried : the whole body of the forces still marched on two miles further, where they found divers wigwams of the enemy, among which were many things scattered up and down, arguing the hasty flight of the owners ; half a mile further, as they passed on through many fields of stately corn, they found Philip's own wigwam ; every place given them to perceive the enemy's hasty departure from thence ; after they had marched two miles further they came to the sea side, yet in all this time meeting with no Indians, nor any sign of them, unless of their flight to some other places. The season being like to prove very tempestuous, and rainy, Capt. Cudworth with some of the men of Plymouth passed over to Rhode Island. The forces under Major Savage were forced to abide all night in the open field, without any shelter notwithstanding the abundance of rain that fell, and in the morning, despairing to meet with an enemy on Mount Hope, they retreated back to their head quarters at Swanzy, in the way meeting with many Indian dogs, that seemed to have lost their masters. That night Capt. Prentice's troops for conveniency of quarters, as also for discovery, was dismissed to lodge at Seaconke or Rehoboth, a town within six miles of Swanzy. As they returned back in the morning, Capt. Prentice divided his troops, delivering one half to Lieut. Oakes, and keeping the other himself, who as they rode along, espied a company of Indians burning an house : but could not pursue them by reason of several fences, that they could not go over till the Indians had escaped into a swamp. Those with Lieut. Oakes had the like discovery but with better success, as to the advantage of the ground, so as pursuing of them upon a plain, they slew four or five of them in the chase, whereof one was known to be Thebe a Sachem of Mount Hope, another of them was a chief Counsellor of Philip's ; yet in this attempt the Lieutenant lost one of his company, John Druce by name, who was mortally wounded in his bowels, whereof he soon after died, to the great grief of his companions. After the said troops came up to head quarters at Swanzy, they understood from Capt. Cudworth that the enemy were discovered upon Pocasset, * another neck of land lying over an arm of the sea more towards Cape God : However it was resolved that a more narrow search should be made after them, both upon Mount Hope and upon the ground between Swanzy and Rehoboth to scout the swamps and assault them if they could find where they were entrenched. Capt. Henchman and Capt. Prentice were ordered to search the swamps, while Capt. Mosely and Capt. Paige with his dragoons attended on Major Savage, should return back into Mount Hope, that they might be sure to leave none of the enemy behind them, when they should remove to pursue them elsewhere.

About ten o'clock the next morning, July 4th, Capt Henchman, after a long and tedious march, came to the head quarters, and informed that he came upon a place where the enemy had newly been that night, but were escaped out of his reach : But the following night, before they were determined of any other motion, Captain Hutchinson came up from Boston with new orders for them to pass into Narrhaganset, to treat with the Sachems there, and if it might be, to prevent their joining with Philip. Capt. Cudworth by this time was come up to the head quarters, having left a garrison of 40 men upon Mount Hope neck. The next morning was spent in consultation how to carry on the treaty ; it was then resolved, that they should go to make a peace with a sword in their hands, having no small ground of suspicion that the said Narrhagansets might join with the enemy wherefore they thought it necessary to carry all the Massachusetts forces over into the Narrhaganset country, to fight them if there should be need ; Capt. Mosely passed over by water to attend Capt. Hutchinson in his dispatch ; the other companies with the troopers riding round about. As they passed they found the Indians in Pomham's country (next adjoining to Philip's borders) all fled, and their wigwams without any people in them.

After they came to the Narrhagansets Sachems, three or four days were spent in a treaty, after which a peace was concluded with them by the messengers of Connecticut colony (who were ordered to meet with those of the Massachusetts,) and the commanders of the forces sent against Philip : Hostages were also given by the said Narrhagansets for the performance of the agreement. A copy of the said agreement, and the articles on which a peace was concluded, here follow. It being always understood, that Plymouth colony was included in the said agreement, although their forces were not then present, but remained at home near the enemies borders, to secure their towns, and oppose Philip as there might be occasion, if he offered to make any new attempt in the mean time.

Articles, covenant and agreements had, made and concluded by, and between Major Thomas Savage, Captain Edward Hutchinson, and Mr. Joseph Dudley, in behalf of the government of the Massachusetts colony, and Major Wait Winthrop and Mr. Richard Smith on behalf of Connecticut colony the one party, and Agamaug, Wampsh alias Corman, Taitson Tawageson, Counsellors and Attorneys to Canonicus, Ninigret Matataog, old Queen Quaiapen, Quananshit and Pomham, the six present Sachems of the whole Narrhaganset country on the other party, referring to several differences and troubles lately risen between them, and for a final conclusion of settled peace and amity between the said Sachems, their heirs and successors for ever, and the Governor's of the said Massachusetts and Connecticut, and their successors in the said governments for ever.

I. That all and every of the said Sachems shall from time to time carefully seize, & living or dead deliver unto one or other of the above said governments, all and every of Sachem Philip's subjects whatsoever, that shall come, or be found within the precinct of any other lands, and that with greatest diligence & faithfulness,

II. That they shall with their utmost ability use all acts of hostility against the said Philip and his subjects, entering his lands or any other lands of the English, to kill and destroy the said enemy, until a cessation from war with the said enemy be concluded by both the abovesaid colonies.

III. That the said Sachems, by themselves and their agents, shall carefully search out and deliver all stolen goods whatsoever taken by any of their subjects from any of the English, whether formerly or lately, and shall make full satisfaction for all wrongs or injuries done to the estate of any of the subjects of the several colonies, according to the judgment of indifferent men, in case of dissatisfaction between the offenders and the offended parties, or deliver the offenders.

IV. That all preparations for war or acts of hostility against any of the English subjects, shall forever for the future cease; together with all manner of thefts, pilferings, killing of cattle or any manner of breach of peace whatsoever shall with utmost care be prevented, and instead thereof their strength to be used as a guard round about the Narrhaganset country, for the English inhabitants safety and security.

V. In token of the abovesaid Sachems reality in this treaty and conclusion, and for the security of the several English governments and subjects, they do freely deliver unto the abovesaid gentlemen, in the behalf of the abovesaid colonies, John Wobequob, Weowthim, Pewkes, Weenew, four of their near kinsmen and choice friends, to be and remain as hostages in several places of the English jurisdictions, at the appointment of the honorable Governors of the abovesaid colonies, there to be civilly treated, not as prisoners, but otherwise at their honors discretion, until the abovesaid articles are fully accomplished to the satisfaction of the several governments, the departure of any of them in the mean time to be accounted breach of the peace, and of these present articles.

VI. The said gentlemen in the behalf of the governments to which they do belong, do engage to every the said Sachems and their subjects, that if they or any of them shall seize and bring into either the abovesaid English governments, or to Mr. Smith inhabitant of Narrhaganset, Philip Sachem alive, he or they so delivering, shall receive for their pains, forty trucking cloth coats, in case they bring his head they shall have twenty like good coats paid them: For every living subject of said Philip's so delived, the deliverer shall receive two coats, and for every head one coat, as a gratuity for their service herein, making it appear to satisfaction, that the heads or persons are belonging to the enemy, and that they are of their seizure.

VII. The said Sachems do renew and confirm unto the English inhabitants or others, all former grants, sales, bargains or conveyances of lands, meadows, timber, grass, stones, or whatever else the English have heretofore bought or quietly possessed and enjoyed, to be unto them, and their heirs, and assigns for ever; as also all former articles made with the confederate colonies.

Lastly, The said councillors and attornies do premeditately, seriously, and upon good advice covenant, conclude and agree all abovesaid solemnly, and call God to witness they are, and shall remain true friends to the English governments, and perform the above said articles punctually, using their utmost endeavor, care and faithfulness therein: In witness wherof they have set their hands and seals.

Petaquamscot, July 15, 1675.

During this treaty of peace with the Narrhagansets, Capt. Cudworth with the forces from plimouth, under his command, found something to do nearer home, though of another nature as it proved, fst. to make war whilst the other were (as they thought) making peace: In the first place therefore he dispatched Capt. Fuller (joining Lieut. Church together with him in commission) with fifty in his company to Pocasset, on the same account, as the other went to Narrhaganset; either to conclude a peace with them, if they would continue friends, and give hostages for the confirmation thereof, or, fight them if they should declare themselves enemies, and join with Philip; himself intending to draw down his forces to Rehoboth, to be ready for a speedy march to Taunton, and so down into the other side of the country, upon the news that some of the enemy were burning and spoiling of Middleborough and Dartmouth, two small villages lying in the way betwixt Pocasset and Plimouth. Upon Thursday July 7, Capt. Fuller with Lieut. Church went into Pocasset to seek after the enemy, or else as occasion might serve to treat with those Indians at Pocasset, with whom Mr. Church was very well acquainted, always holding good correspondence with them. After they had spent that day and most of the night, in traversing the said Pocasset neck, and watching all night in a house which they found their, they could hear no tidings of any Indians; insomuch that Capt. Fuller began to be weary of his design: Mr. Church in the mean while assuring him that they should find Indians before it were long, yet for greater expedition they divided their company, Capt. Fuller taking down toward the sea-side where it seems after little skirmishing with them wherein one man only received a small wound, he either saw or heard too many Indians for himself and his company to deal with, which made him and them betake themselves to a house near the water side, from whence they were fetched off by a sloop before night to Rhode Island. Capt. Church (for so he may well be stiled after this time) marched further into the neck, imagining that if there were Indians in the neck, they should find them about a pease field not far off. As soon as they came near the said field he espied two Indians among the peas, who also had at the same time espied him; and presently making some kind of shout, a great number of Indians came about the field, pursuing the said Capt. Church and his men in great numbers to the sea side: there being not above fifteen with Church, yet seven or eight score of the Indians pursuing after them. Now was a fit time for this young Captain and his small company to handsel their valour upon this great rout of Indians, just ready to devour them: But victory stands no more in the number of soldiers, than verity in the plurality of voices: And although some of these fifteen had scarce courage enough for themselves, yet their Captain had enough for himself, and some to spare for his friends, which he there had an opportunity of improving to the full. When he saw the hearts of any of his followers to fail, he would bid them be of good courage and fight stoutly, and (possibly by some divine impression upon his heart) assured them not a bullet of the enemy should hurt any one of them; which one of the company, more dismayed than the rest could hardly believe, till he saw the proof of it in his own person, for the captain perceiving the man was not able to fight, made him gather rocks together for a kind of shelter and baricado for the rest, that must either of necessity fight or fall by the enemies. It chanced as this faint hearted soldier had a flat stone in his arms, and was carrying it to the shelter that he was making upon the bank a bullet of the enemy was thus warded from his body, by which he must else have perished, which experience put new life into him, so as he followed his business very manfully afterward, insomuch that they defended themselves under a small shelter hastily made up all that afternoon, not one being either slain or wounded, yet it was certainly known that they killed at least fifteen of their enemies: And at the last, when they had spent all their ammunition, and made their guns unserviceable by often firing, they were fetched all off by Capt. Golding's sloop and carried safe to Rhode Island in spite of all their enemies; yea, such was the bold and undaunted courage of his champion, Capt. Church, that, not willing to leave any token behind of their flying for want of courage, he went back in the face of his enemies to fetch his hat, which he had left at a spring, whither the extreme heat of the weather, and his labor in fighting had caused him to repair for the quenching of his thirst an hour or two before. It seems in the former part of the same day, five men coming from Rhode Island, to look up their cattle upon Pocasset Neck, were assaulted by the same indians, one of the five was Capt. Church's servant, who had his leg broke in the skirmish, the rest hardly escaping with their lives: This was the first time that ever any mischief was done by the Indians upon Pocasset Neck. Those of Rhode Island were hereby alarmed to look to themselves, as well as the rest of the English of Plimouth, or the Massachusetts collony.

This assault rather heightned and increased than daunted the courage of Capt. Church; for not making a cowardly flight, but a fair retreat, which providence offered him by the sloop aforesaid, after his ammunition was spent, he did not stay long at Rhode Island, but hastened over to the Massachusetts forces, and borrowing three files of men of Capt. Henshman with his Lieutenant; Mr. Church and he returned again to Pocasset, where they had another skirmish with the enemy, wherein some few of them (fourteen or fifteen) were slain, which struck such a terror into Philip, that he betook himself to the swamps about Pocasset, where he lay hid till the return of the rest of the forces from the Narrhagansets, like a wild boar kept at a bay by this small party till more hands came up.

Thus were the Plimouth forces busied, during the time of the treaty with the Narrhagansets, which being issued as it was :

On Friday July 15, our forces marched forward and arrived at Rehoboth, where having no intelligence of the enemy nearer than a great swamp on Pocasset, eighteen miles from Taunton; they marched next day twelve miles to an house at Metapoiset (a small neck of land in the bottom of Taunton Bay, in the midway between Mount Hope and Pocasset Neck); from whence they marched for Taunton, July 17, whither after a tedious march of 20 miles they came in the evening, and found the people generally gathered into eight garrison houses.

On Monday July 18, they marched eighteen miles before they could reach the swamp where the enemy was lodged : As soon as they came to the place, Plimouth forces being now joined with them, our soldiers resolutely entered in amongst the enemies, who took the advantage of the thick underwood, to make a shot at them that first entered, whereby five were killed outright, seven more wounded, some of whose wounds proved mortal : After the first shot, the enemy presently retired deeper into the swamp, deserting their wigwams (about an 100 in all), newly made of green bark, so as they would not burn: In one of them they found an old man, who confessed that Philip had been lately there. Having spent some time in searching the swamp, and tired themselves to no purpose (yet it was said that one half hour more would have at that time utterly subdued Philip and all his power) the commander in chief, night drawing on a pace, not thinking it safe to tarry longer in so dangerous a place, where every one was in as much danger of his fellows as of his foes, being ready to fire upon every bush they saw move supposing Indians were there, ordered a retreat to be sounded, that they might have time to dispose of the dead and wounded men, which accordingly was attended: * Plimouth forces who had entered in the rear, returning in the front. It was judged that the enemy being by this means brought into a pound, it would be no hard matter to deal with them, and that it would be needless charge to keep so many companies of soldiers together to wait upon such an inconsiderable enemy, now almost as good as taken: Whereupon most of the companies belonging to the Massachusetts were drawn off, only Capt. Henchman with an 100 foot being left there together with Plimouth forces, to attend the enemies motion, being judged sufficient for that end. Major Savage, Capt. Paige with

* The English lost fifteen men in this expedition, Hutchinson.

Capt. Mosely and their companies returned to Boston : Capt. Prentice with his troop were ordered toward Mendham, where it seems, about the middle of July, some Indians, wishing well to Philip's design, had made an assault upon some of the inhabitants, as they were at their labour in the field, killing five or six of them ; as soon as they had done, flying away into the woods, so as they could not easily be pursued. The inhabitants of the same village, lying, in the heart of the enemy's country began to be discouraged, so as within a little time after they forsook the place abandoning their houses to the fury of the enemy, which by them were soon after turned into ashes. But to return to King Philip who was now lodged in the great swamp upon Pocasset Neck, of seven miles long : Capt. HENCHMAN and the PLIMMOUTH forces kept a dilligent eye upon the enemy, but were not willing to run into the mire and dirt after them in a dark swamp, being taught by late experience how dangerous it is to fight in such dismal woods, when their eyes were muffled with the leaves, and their arms pinioned with the thick boughs of the trees, as their feet were continually shackled with the roots spreading every way in those boggy woods. It is ill fighting with a wild beast in his own den.— They resolved therefore to starve them out of the swamp, where they knew full well they could not long subsist : To that end they began to build a fort, as it were to beleaguer the enemy, and prevent his escape out of the place, where they thought they had him fast enough. Philip in the mean time was not ignorant of what was doing without, and was ready wherein to read his own doom, if he tarried much longer there, he knew he should fall into their hands from whom he could expect no mercy: The case being therefore desperate, he resolved with an hundred or two of his best fighting men to make an escape by the water, all passages by the land being sufficiently guarded by the English forces. The swamp where they were lodged being not far from an arm of the sea, coming up to Taunton, they taking the advantage of a low tide, either waded over one night in the end of July, or else waded themselves over upon small rafts of timber very early before break of day, by which means the greatest part of his company escaped away into the woods, leading into the Nipmuck country, altogether to the English forces, that lay encamped on the other side of the swamp. About an 100 or more of the women and children, which were like to be rather burdensome than serviceable, were left behind, who soon after resigned up themselves to the mercy of the English. Philip's escape thus from Pocasset could not long be concealed after the day appeared there being much champaign land through which he was to pass, so as being discovered to some of Rehoboth, the inhabitants presently followed him, together with a party of the Mohegins, that a little before came to Boston, offering their service against Philip, and were sent into those parts to be ordered by Captain HENCHMAN, but before they came to him were easily persuaded to go along with any of the English that were engaged in the pursuit of Philip. News also thereof was carried to Capt. HENCHMAN, who as soon as he could get over with six files of men (rowing hard all or most part of the day to get to Providence) followed after the enemy. The Mohegins with the men of Rehoboth, and some of Providence came upon their rear over night, slew about 30 of them, took much plunder from them, without any considerable loss to the English. Captain HENCHMAN came not up to them (pursuing them only by the track) till the skirmish was over, and having marched 22 miles that day was not well able to go any further that night; on the other hand, the forces that came from Rehoboth and that belonged to Plymouth, having left their horses three miles off, could not go back to fetch them without much loss of time, and therefore looking at it altogether bootless to go after them in the morning returned back the next day, leaving Captain HENCHMAN with his six files, and the Mohegins to pursue the chase to Nippsatchet, which he did the next morning Capt. HENCHMAN, that he might the better engage the Mohegins to march with him 30 miles, gave them half his provision, and was himself recruited again by the care of Capt. Edmunds of Providence, and Lieut. Brown who brought provision after him to the Nipmuck forts. Mr. Newman, the Minister of Rehoboth, deserved not a little commendation for exciting his neighbors and friends to pursue thus far after Philip, animating of them by his own example and presence: But what the reason was why Philip was followed no further, it is better to suspend, than too critically to enquire. This is now the third time when a good opportunity of suppressing the rebellion of the Indians, was put into the hands of the English; but time and chance happeneth to all men, so that the most likely means are often frustrated of their desired end. All human endeavors shall arrive at no other success, than the counsel of God hath pre-ordained, that no flesh might glory in their own wisdom, but give unto God the praise of all their successes, and quietly bear whatever miscarriages he hath ordered to befall them. It appears by the issue of these things, that although this wound was not incurable, yet much more blood must be taken away before it could be healed. But by this means Philip escaped away to the westward; kindling the flame of war in all the western plantations of the Massachusetts colony wherever he came so that by this fatal accident the fire that was in a likely way to be extinguished, as soon almost as it began, did on a sudden break out through the whole jurisdiction of the Massachusetts, both eastward and westward, endangering also the neighbour colony of Connecticut, which hath also suffered somewhat by the fury of this flame, though not considerable to what the other colonies have undergone.

While things after this manner proceeded in and about the colony of Plimouth, the Commissioners of the rest of the colonies were consulting and advising what was to be done for preventing the mischief threatened from spreading any further, fearing (as indeed there was too much cause) that although Philip only appeared to make the first attempt, yet more either already were, or soon might be persuaded to join with him in acting this bloody tragedy.

It hath been already declared what hath been done for the securing of the Narrhagansets, those that were sent as messengers on that errand, always reported that the elder people were in appearance, not only inclinable to peace, but seemed very desirous thereof, insomuch as their two eldest Sachems expressed much joy when it was concluded; but as since hath appeared, all was but to gain time, and cover their treacherous intents and purposes, that they might in the next spring fall upon the English plantations all at once, as some prisoners lately brought in have owned and confessed; nor have any of those Indians with whom the present war hath been, ever regarded any agreements of peace made with the English, further than out of necessity and slavish fear they were compelled thereunto, as may be seen by the records of the united colonies from the year 1641 to the present time, notwithstanding all their fair pretences ; for Ninigret, the old Sachem of the Narrhagansets, who alone of all the rest of that country Sachems disowned the present war, and refused to have any hand therein, had threatened, as was proved to his face before the commissioners, in the years 1646 and 1647, that they would carry on the war against the Mohegins, whatever were the mind of the Commissioners, and that they would kill the English cattle, and heap them up as high as their wigwams, and that an Englishman should not stir out of his door to piss, but they would kill him ; all which he could not deny, yet this old fox made many promises of peace, when the dread of the English ever since the Pequod war moved him thereunto ; foreseeing as he is said to have told his neighbors, that they would all be ruined if they made war with the English, as is since come to pass. However the good hand of God was seen in so ordering things, that the Narrhagansets were for the present restrained from breaking out into open hostility against the English, at that time when Philip began which if they had then done, according to the eye of reason, it would have been very difficult if possible, for the English to have saved any of their inland plantations from being destroyed. Thus, although God hath in his wisdom suffered so much of the rage of the heathen to be let loose against his people here, as sorely to scourge them, that by the wrath of men, praise might be yielded to his holy name, yet hath he in his abundant goodness restrained the remainder that it should not consume.

The next thing in order to be related, is the calamity that befel the village of Brookfield, which notwithstanding all the care that was taken, fell into the hands of the perfidious Nipnet Indians, as shall here in the next place be declared ; only, as we pass along, to remind the reader in a few words, what was the issue of Captain Henchman's pursuit of Philip. The Plymouth forces being returned home, as was said before, Capt. Henchman with his six file of men, and the Mohegin Indians, having continued in the pursuit of Philip till they had spent all their provision, and tired themselves, yet never coming within sight of him, the Mohegin Indians in their company directed them to Mendham, and then leaving them, returned also to their own country. Captain Henchman in his march toward Mendham, or at Mendham, met with Capt. Mosely coming up to bring him provision, and advertising him of what success he had met with in the pursuit, they altered their course, for Capt. Henchman was sent down to the Governor and Council, to know what they should do : They presently remanded him to Pocasset, and ordered him to stay there if there was need, or else to draw off, surrendering the fort he had been building to Plimouth forces, which last was chosen by those of Plimouth, whereupon Capt. Henshaw returning to Boston, was ordered to disband his men. Capt. Mosely was ordered to march to Quabaog or Brookfield, where he continued a while, with the other Captains sent up for the relief of the people there, and to seek after the enemy in those woods; but after some time spent in ranging the country thereabouts, not meeting with any of the infidels, he with his company came downwards, searching the woods betwixt Lancaster (where a man and his wife with two children were slain on the Lord's day, Aug. 22) and Marlborough, where also a lad keeping sheep was shot at by an Indian that wore a sign, as if he had been a friend: the Indian was supposed to belong to the Hassanemesit Indians, at that time confined in Marlborough, where they had liberty to dwell in a kind of a fort. The next day the inhabitants sent to demand their guns, Capt. Mosely acquainted therewith, marched to the fort and found much suspicion against eleven of them, for singing and dancing, and having bullets and flugs, and much power hid in their baskets; insomuch that eleven of them were sent down prisoners to Boston, upon suspicion that they had an hand in killing the four at Lancaster, and shooting at the Marlborough shepherd: But upon tryal, the said prisoners were all of them acquitted of the fact, and were either released, or else were with others of that fort, sent for better security, and for preventing future trouble in the like kind to some of the islands below Boston toward Nantasket.

About this time Capt. Mosely was sent with a company of soldiers to some Indian plantations up Merrimack river, as high as Pennycook, but they found no Indians there; those that belonged to the place having withdrawn themselves from their native place, that they might not meddle in the present quarrel, as is confidently believed that Woonalonset the Sachem of that country had so resolved. That coast being clear of the enemies, Capt. Mosely soon after was sent up with his men to the towns westward about Hadley, if it might be, to subdue the enemy, who a little before, and at that time, was doing all the mischief he could in those western plantations, both by fire and sword.

But to return and pursue the rebellious Indians, and keep pace with them in our history, though our forces as yet could never overtake them in the woods. The Governor and Council of the Massachusetts were sensible of as much danger from the Nipnet Indians, as from the former; they being the inland part of the country betwixt the sea coast and Connecticut river westward, and the towns about the Massachusetts Bay eastward, whereupon some persons that used to trade with the said Nipnets, were sent to sound them, and find how they stood affected, for which also there was the more reason, because they were always in subjection to the Sachem of Mount Hope, and so were the more like to engage in the present quarrel; of which there had been sufficient proof already; when on the 14th of July, some of the Nipnet Indians next bordering on Philip's country set upon some of Mendham, * where they killed four or five persons, which was the first mischief done upon any of the inhabitants within the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts, acted as was said by one Matoonas, who was father to him that had committed a murder soon after Philip's first rebellion, Anno 1671. The Messenger that was sent thither, brought word back that they found the said Indians wavering; the young men very surly and insolent, the elder ones shewing some inclination to maintain the wonted peace. Soon after, July 28, 1675, Capt Wheeler was sent to assist Capt. Hutchinson with a party of 20 horse to treat further about the peace, who going first to Quabaog or Brookfield, (a town situate about 60 or 70 miles from Boston, in the road of Connecticut, lying about 25 miles from the said river, and not far distant from the chief seat of the Nipnet Indians) the inhabitants of the said Brookfield had been so deluded by those treacherous villains, that fearing no danger, they obtain of those Nipnets, the promise of a treaty upon the 2d of August; whereupon some of the chief of the town rode along unarmed with the said Wheeler and Hutchinson, with their party of horse until they came to the place appointed ; but finding no Indians, so secure were they, that they ventured along further, to find the infidels at their chief town, never suspecting the least danger but when they had rode four or five miles that way, they fell into an ambush, of two or three hundred Indians, laid in such a narrow passage, betwixt a steep hill on the one hand, and an hideous swamp on the other, that it was scarce possible for any of them to escape, eight of them being shot down upon the place (whereof three were of Brookfield) and three mortally wounded, whereof Capt. Hutchinson was one ; Capt. Wheeler was also near losing his life whose horse was shot down under him and himself shot through the body, so that all manner of hopes to escape had been removed from him, had it not been for his son, who was (by God's good providence) near or next unto him, this son, being a man of undaunted courage, (notwithstanding his own arm was broken with a bullet) with great nimbleness and agility of body dismounted himself, and speedily mounted his father upon his own horse, himself getting upon another, whose master was killed, by which means they both escaped, and were afterwards cured. Much ado had those that were left alive to recover Brookfield, which in all probability they never had done) the common road being way-laid with Indians on every side as was afterwards known) had it not been for one well acquainted with those woods, who led them in a by path, by which means they got thither a little before the Indians, who quickly came flocking into the town, with full intent to destroy it with fire and sword. But by special providence the inhabitants were all gathered to the principal house of the village (there being scarce 20 in the town) before the barbarous miscreants came upon them, immediately setting fire upon all the dwelling houses with most of the other buildings in the town, save that one into which the inhabitants were retired which they several times attempted to burn, but were almost miraculously defeated of their purpose by the immediate hand of God. In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen. For when they had for two days assaulted that poor handful of helpless people, both night and day pouring in shot upon them incessantly with guns and also thrusting poles with fire brands, and rags dipt in brimstone tyed to the ends of them to fire the house; at last they used this devilish stratagem, to fill a cart with hemp, flax and other combustible matter, and so thrusting it backward with poles spliced together a great length, after they had kindled it; but as soon as it had begun to take fire, a storm of rain unexpectedly falling, put out the fire, or else all the poor people, about 70, souls, would either have been consumed by merciless flames, or else have fallen into the hands of their cruel enemies, like wolves continually yelling and gaping for their piety.

Thus was that distressed company strangely delivered, who have for ever cause to say with the Psalmist, Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us a prey to their teeth, our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers, the snare is broken and we are escaped. For the next night Major Willard, by accident hearing of the danger the people were in, came with forty eight dragoons to their relief. The occasion which brought Major Willard, and Capt. Parker of Groton with forty-six more, so timely to their relief was this ; Major Willard in pursuance of his commission from the Governor and Council, was upon Wednesday August 4th in the morning, marching out after some Indians to the westward, to secure them : just as they were setting forth, some of Marlborough, who had intelligence (by those that were going to Connecticut, and forced to return) what distress Brookfield was in, and knowing of Major Willard's purpose to go out that morning from Lancaster, sent a post to acquaint him therewith, which, though it did not find him in the town, yet overtook him before he had gone above four or five miles from the place : whereupon, conceiving it more needful to succour Brookfield in so eminent danger, than to proceed further upon his intended design, he altered his course and marched directly thither, being about 30 miles distant when the tidings were brought him ; so he arrived there that night very seasonably, about an hour after it was dark, or else in probability they had all perished before the relief sent up from Boston could have reached them, which was not till three days after. The providence of God likewise in bringing in the said Major so safely, as well as seasonably to their relief, was very remarkable : For the Indians had subtilly contrived to cut off all relief sent before it could come at them, by laying ambushes, and placing their scouts at two or three miles distance round the town : About an hundred of them were lodged at an house not far off in the way toward Boston, to cut off any succour that might come from thence : but it is supposed they were so intense upon the project they were about for firing the house concluding it would without fail take place, that either they did not mind their business of watching, or made such a noise for joy thereof, that they did not hear their centinels when they shot off their guns, at two miles distance. It is said that another party of the Indians let the Major and his company purposely pass by them, without any opposition, waiting for the blow to be given at their first approach near the house, purposing them to have themselves fallen upon their rear, and so to have cut them all off, before the besieged understood any thing thereof. But it pleased God so to order things in providence, that no notice was taken of them by the besiegers, nor were they at all discerned by them; till they had made themselves known to their friends; and were admitted within the court of guard when the enemy had notice of, they poured in their shot abundantly upon them; but they were now sheltered from the danger thereof; only it seems their horses were exposed to their fury, as many of them were maimed and killed, as were most of the cattle belonging to the inhabitants of the place soon after. This honored person, Major Willard, continued at Brookfield, after this famous exploit for the preservation of the poor besieged there, divers weeks, to order such companies as were sent up that way for the securing the plantations on that side of the country; and not long after he went himself also to Hadley upon the like service of the country in the present war; but after some time spent in those parts, he returned back to his own place, to order the affairs of his own regiment, much needing his presence, and leading the forces about Hadley under the command of the Major of that regiment.

But to return to what was in hand before. After the Indians understood that succours were come in to the besieged, they fired all that they had left standing for their own shelter while they had besieged the place beforementioned, and ran all away into their own dens, in the neighbouring woods: however it was confessed by one of themselves, that the enemy had 80 of their men killed and wounded in this business. But ere we pass any further in pursuit of the history of these matters, it will not be amiss to let the reader understand the horrible perfidious and treacherous dealing of these Nipnet Indians, who although of all other they had the least reason as to any pretence of injury, yet did most deceitfully and barbarously join with Philip and his Indians, after they had been several times sent unto by the Governor and Council of the Massachusetts, by the advice of Plymouth, to have prevented their rising, as well as the rising of the Narrhagansets, and also had faithfully promised not to meddle in the quarrel, as may more fully appear by the engagement under the hands of their Sachems, some time before Capt. Hutchinson and Capt. Wheeler were sent up to them, which by reason of the haste and unskillfulness of the messengers on that behalf sent, is not so fit for public view: but the account of it from their return, was under their hand and oath, July 24. 1675, when Lieut. Ephraim Curtice spake with five of the Nipnet Sachems, four too many to govern so small a people, but lying upon the head of the principal Indian territories, they were divided into so many small parties, two of whom, viz. Sam, Sachem of Weshacum, and Netaump were executed together afterward at Boston. All of them did at that time solemnly renew their covenant and promise under their hands to come to Boston to speak further with the Governor, instead of which, what they perfidiously did against Capt. Hutchinson and others, hath already been declared.

Upon the report of this sad disaster that befel the inhabitants of Brookfield, forces were sent up under the command of Capt. Lathrop and others, to pursue after those Indians, harbouring about those places, and if it might be to prevent them from joining with the Indians upon Connecticut river, who as yet had not discovered themselves as willing to espouse Philip's interest, but rather made some semblance to the contrary. There was much time spent by Major Willard, and several companies of soldiers left under his command, about the Nipnet country, but all to no purpose, for partly by the treachery of some of the Indians that came to their assistance, that seemed to favor the English, but rather acted in behalf of the enemy, partly by the subtleties of the enemies themselves, who could easily by their scouts discern the approach of our soldiers, and by the nimbleness of their feet escape them, our soldiers could never meet with any of them, but only by that means driving them further westward, they gathered all the Indians they could to their party about Pecomptuck, alias Deerfield, Swanscott, and Squakeag where were some plantations of English newly began, whom they assaulted in the next place, and did what mischief they could upon them.

It is here to be noted, that although that worthy patriot and experienced soldier, Major Willard, hearing of the distress of Brookfield by some that were traveling to Connecticut, was the first that relieved the distressed people of Quabaog or Brookfield, yet Major Pynchon of Springfield also by accident hearing of their calamity, had not only sent word thereof to Hartford, (from whom he received a supply of 25 or 30 soldiers under Capt. Wats) but did also send a band of men under Lieut. Cooper (Afterwards villainously slain by Springfield Indians) who with those sent from Hartford, and some Indians belonging to Springfield (seemingly forward to help the English) made up fourscore or thereabouts: these marched down to Brookfield the same day that Capt. Lothrop and Capt. Beers came up from the Massachusetts, who having spent some time in searching the woods about Springfield, and finding none of the Indians, did the next day march up to a place called Meminisset by the Indians, where Capt. Hutchinson and Capt. Wheeler were assaulted, and finding no sign of any Indians amongst those woods and swamps, the company that came from Springfield, left the soldiers (who returned to their quarters at Brookfield) and went up themselves further northward, at least 20 miles from the said Brookfield, and finding no track of Indians in all those woods, they returned back to Springfield, leaving enough to defend the the people of Brookfield, and the garrison there.

By this it appears, that the Indians by this occasion were driven more westward into the woods between Hadley and Squakhead, * where they soon effected their design, viz. to leaven the Indians on that side the country with the same prejudice and malice against the English, with which they themselves were (though without cause) embittered ; for in a few days the device took place amongst Hadley and Deerfield Indians, and was presently put in execution by the said Indians, withdrawing from the English and assisting Philip and the Nipnets to spoil and destroy all the towns westward, as soon after came to pass : yet at the first some of the Hadley Indians pretended real friendship to the English, and offered themselves to fight against Philip, but the Mohegin Indians that came afterward from Hartford began to suspect the treachery of the other, and told the English plainly, that no good would be done, while any of that company went along with them in pursuit of the enemy, for as was said, they would always give some shout when they came near the enemy, as if they should thereby wish them to look to themselves : insomuch that the said Hadley Indians fell into great suspicion with the English, and for a proof of their fidelity, they were required to bring in their arms to the English, but that very night they fled away from their dwellings, which was in a wooden fortification, within a mile of Hatfield, where-

* Northfield, 50 miles up the river from Hadley.

By they plainly discovered that they had secretly plotted to join with Philip's party, as far as they had an opportunity to do them any eminent service. Some think the English failed in point of prudence, not managing that business so warily as they might, which if they had done, their defection had been prevented, but it is most probable that Philip had hired them to own his quarrel, by sending them gifts in the spring: and that the body of the said Indians were most readily inclined thereunto: but the Sachems and the elder ones of them, seemed loth at first to engage against the English. In conclusion, when they had so falsely left their dwellings, and were running after Phillip and the Nipnet Indians (at that time haroured in those woods) the English were so provoked that were under the Capt. Lothrop and Beers, that they pursued after them very early the next morning, and overtook them about ten miles above Hatfield, at a place called Sugarloaf hill, and had a small skirmish with them, wherein there were nine or ten of the English slain, and about 26 Indians: Yet the rest escaped, and so joined with Philip and his company; presently after which accident, they were so emboldened, that upon the first of Sept. about seven days after, they set upon Deerfield, killed one man, and laid most of the houses in ashes. About two or three days after they fell upon Squakeag, another new plantation, fifteen miles higher up the river, above

Deerfield, where they killed nine or ten of the people, the rest hardly escaped into the garrison house.

The next day, this disaster not being known. Capt. Beers, for fear of the worst, with 36 men, was sent up to the said Squakeag, with supplies both of men and provisions to secure the small garrison there, but before they came very near to the town, they were set upon by many hundreds, of Indians out of the bushes by a swamp side. By this sudden surprizal Capt. Beers (who was known to fight valiantly to the very last) with about 20 of his men, were slain, the rest flying back to Hadley. Here the barbarous villains shewed their insolent rage and cruelty, more than ever before, cutting off the heads of some of the slain, and fixing them upon poles near the highway, and not only so, but one (if not more) was found with a chain hooked into his under jaw, and so hung up on the bough of a tree, (it is feared he was hung up alive) by which means they thought to daunt and discourage any that might come to their relief, and also to terrify those that should be spectators with the beholding so sad an object; Insomuch that Major Treat with his company, going up two days after to fetch off the residue of the garrison, were solemnly affected with that doleful sight, which made them make the more haste to bring down the garrison, not waiting for any opportunity to take revenge upon the enemy, having but an 100 with him, too few for such a purpose. Capt. Appleton going up after him, met him coming down, and would willingly have persuaded them to have turned back, to see if they could have made any spoil upon the enemy, but the greater part advised to the contrary; so that they were all forced to return with what they could carry away, leaving the rest for a booty to the enemy, who shall ere long pay a sad reckoning for their robberies and cruelties; in the time appointed: But the sufferings of the English were not as yet come to their height, for after they were come to Hadley, the commander in chief taking counsel with the officers of the soldiers, ordered them that were then present to garrison the towns about; some to be at Northampton, Hatfield and Deerfield, and some to remain at Hadley, where were the head quarters of the English. But perceiving that little good was to be done upon the enemy in those parts, it was agreed that what corn was left at Deerfield, being threshed out as well as they could in those tumults (above 3000 bushels was supposed to be there standing in stacks) should be brought to Hadley, and to wait further time to fight the enemy. It came to Capt. Lothrop's turn, or rather it was his choice with about 80 men to guard several carts laden with corn, and other goods. The company under Capt. Mosely then quartering at Deerfield intended that day to pursue after the enemy. But upon Sept. 18; that most fatal day; the sadest that ever befel New-England, as the company under Capt. Lothrop were marching along with the carts (it may be too securely) never apprehending danger so near, they were suddenly set upon, and almost all cut off, (90 killed, teamsters included) not above 7 or 8 escaping; Which great defeat came to pass by the unadvised proceedings of the Captain (who was himself slain in the first assault) although he wanted neither courage nor skill to lead his soldiers; but having taken up a wrong notion about the best way and manner of fighting with the Indians (which he was always wont to argue for) viz. that it were best to deal with the Indians in their own way, scil. by skulking behind trees, and taking their aim at single persons, which is the usual manner of the Indians fighting one with another; but herein was his great mistake, in not considering the great disadvantage a smaller company would have in dealing that way with a greater multitude: For if five have to deal with one, they may surround him, and every one take his aim at him, while he can level but at one of his enemies at a time: Which gross mistake of his, was the ruin of a choice company of young men, the very flower of the county of Essex, all culled out of the towns belonging to that county, none of which were ashamed to speak with the enemy in the gate; their dear relations at home mourning for them, like Rachel for her children, and would not be comforted, not only be.

cause they were not, but because they were so miserably lost. The like mistake was conceived to be the reason of the loss of the former persons slain with the said Lothrop, pursuing the Indians that ran away from Hadley, and of the 20 slain with Capt. Beer's men, who betook themselves at first to the trees, and at the last a few got to their horses soon after their Captain was shot down. For had he ordered his men to march in a body, as some of his fellow commanders advised, either backward or forward, in reason they had not lost a quarter of the number of them that fell that day by the edge of the sword. For the Indians; notwithstanding their subtilty and cruelty, durst not look an Englishman in the face in the open field, nor ever yet known to kill any man with their guns, unless when they could lie in wait for him in an ambush, or behind some shelter taking aim undiscovered, so that although it was judged by those that escaped, that there were 7 or 800 Indians at least that encountered that company of 80 English; yet if they had kept together in a body, and fought marching, they might have escaped the numbers of the enemy, with little loss in comparison of what they sustained. For the valiant and successful Capt. Mosely; and his Lieutenant; coming (though too late) to their rescue, marched through and through that great body of Indians and yet came off with little or no loss in comparison of the other. And having fought all those Indians for five or six hours upon a march, lost not above two men all that while, nor received other damage except that 8 or 9 were wounded, who were carried to their quarters at night at Hadley whereas if these had proceeded in the same way of fighting as Capt. Lothrop did in the morning, they might have been surrounded, and so have been served as the former were : But God had otherwise determined in his secret counsel, and therefore that was hid from the one, which was a means to preserve the other company.

Other relief also was seasonably sent in, viz. a company of English and Mohegin or Pequod Indians under the command of Major Treat, who was in the morning marching another way, viz. up toward Squakeag to seek after the enemy that way, with about 100 soldiers, Indians and English, upon whose approach the enemy, pretty well acquainted by this last encounter with the valour of the English, immediately went clear away, giving Major Treat and Capt. Mosely, who returned to Deerfield that night, an opportunity to bury the slain the next day. As Capt. Mosely came upon the Indians in the morning, he found them stripping of the slain, amongst whom was one Robert Dutch of Ipswich, having been sorely wounded by a bullet that raised to his skull, and then mauled by the Indian hatchets, was left for dead by the savages, and stripped by them of all but his skin, yet when Capt. Mosely came near, he almost miraculously as one raised from the dead, came towards the English, to their no small amazement, by whom being received and cloathed, he was carried off to the next garrison, and is living and is in perfect health at this day. May he be to the friends and relations of the rest of the slain, an emblem of their more perfect resurrection at the last day, to receive their crowns among the rest of the martyrs that have laid down or ventured their lives, as a testimony to the truth of their religion, as well as love to their country.

This fore defeat of Capt. Lothrop and his men, was the more to be lamented, in that (falling out so soon after two other of the like nature) it so emboldened the enemy, that they durst soon after adventure upon considerable towns, though well garrisoned with soldiers, and gave them occasion of the most insolent braving the garrison at Deerfield the next day, hanging up the garments of the English in sight of the soldiers, yet on the other side of the river. However, it pleased God, who is always wont to remember his people in their low estate, to put such a restraint upon them, that when they passed very near the garrison house at Deerfield, (wherein were not left above 27 soldiers) their Captain using this stratagem, to cause his trumpet to sound as if he had another troop near by to be called together, they turned another way and made on attempt upon the house where that small number was, which if they had done with any ordinary resolution, so small a handful of men could hardly have withstood the force of so many hundreds as were then gathered together.

What loss the enemy sustained by the resistance of Capt. Lothrop and his men, (who no doubt being all resolute young men, and seeing they should be forced by the hard law of the sword to forego their lives, held them at as high a rate as they could) is not certainly known. It hath since been confessed by some of the Indians themselves, that they lost 96 of their men that day. Capt. Mosely's men coming suddenly upon them when they were pillaging of the dead, fell upon them with such a smart assault, that they drove them presently into a swamp, following them so close, that for seven miles together they fought them upon a march, charging them through and through. Perez Savage and Mr. Pickering, his Lieutenants, deserving no little part of the honor of that day's service, being sometimes called to lead the company in the front, while Capt. Mosely took a little breath, who was almost melted with labouring, commanding, and leading his men through the midst of the enemy.

The Indians gathered together in those parts, appearing so numerous, and, as might justly be supposed, growing more confident by some of their late successes, and the number of our men being after this sad rate diminished, recruits also not being suddenly to be expected, at so great a distance as an hundred miles from all supplies, the commander in chief with the officers, saw a necessity of fighting that garrison at Deerfield, employing the forces they had to secure and strengthen the three next towns below upon Connecticut river. And it was well that counsel was thought upon; for now those wretched cannibals begin to talk of great matters, hoping that by degrees they might destroy all the towns thereabouts, as they had already begun: Their hopes no doubt, were not a little heightened by the accession of the Springfield Indians to their party, who had in appearance all this time stood the firmest to the interest of the English of all the rest in those parts: But they all hanging together, like serpents eggs, were easily persuaded to join with those of Hadley (there being so near a liance between them, for the Sachem of the Springfield Indians was father of Hadley Sachem) not only by the success of their treacherous and blood-thirsty companions, but by the same inbred malice and antipathy against the English manners and religion.

The inhabitants of Springfield were not insensible of their danger, and therefore had upon the first breaking forth of these troubles been treating with their Indians, and had received from them the firmest assurance and pledges of their faithfulness and friendship that could be imagined or desired, both by covenant, promises, and hostages given for security, so as no doubt was left in any of their minds : Yet did these faithless and ungrateful monsters plot with Philip's Indians to burn and destroy all Springfield, as they had done Brookfield before. To that end they sent cunningly and enticed away the hostages from Hartford, where they were, perhaps too securely watched over, a day or two before : Then receiving above 300 of Philip's Indians into their fort, privately in the night time, so as they were neither discerned nor suspected. Yea so confident were such of the inhabitants as were most conversant with the Indians at their fort, that they would not believe there was any such plot in hand, when it was strangely revealed by one Toto an Indian at Windsor, better affected to the English, (about 18 or 20 miles below Springfield, upon the same river and so by post tidings thereof brought to Springfield the night before, insomuch that the Lieutenant of the town, Cooper by name was so far from believing the stratagem, that in the morning himself with another would venture to ride up to the fort, to see whether things were so or no. The fort was about a mile from the town ; when he came within a little thereof, he met these bloody and deceitful monsters, newly issued out of their Euguis Trojanus to act their intended mischief ; they presently fired upon him, divers of them, and shot him, in several places through the body, yet being a man of stout courage, he kept his horse till he recovered the next garrison house, his companion they shot dead upon the place; by this means giving a sad alarm to the town of their intended mischief, which was instantly fired in all places where there were no garrisons. The poor people having never an officer to lead them being like sheep ready for the slaughter, and no doubt the whole town had been totally destroyed, but that a report of the plot being carried about over night, Major Treat came from Westfield time enough in a manner for their rescue, but wanting boats to transport his men, could not do so much as he desired. Major Pynchen coming from Hadley with Capt. Appleton and what forces they could bring along with them, 32 houses being first consumed, preserved the rest of the town from being turned to ashes, in which the over credulous inhabitants might now see (what before they would not believe at the burning Major Pynchon's barns and stables a few days before, to a very great damage of the owner) the faithless and deceitful friendship among those perfidious, cruel and helish monsters.

Amongst the ruins of the said dwellings, the sadest to behold was the house of Mr. Pelatiah Clover, minister of the town, furnished with a brave library, which he had but newly brought back from a garrison wherein it had been for some time before secured, but as if the danger had been over with them, the said minister, a great student, and an h. l. librorum, being impatient for want of his books, brought them back to his great sorrow, fit for a bonfire for the proud insulting enemy. Of all the mischiefs done by the said enemy before that day, the burning of this town of Springfield did more than any other discover the said actors to be the children of the devil, full of all fury and malice, there having been for above 40 years so good correspondence betwixt the English of that town and the neighbouring Indians: But in them is made good what is said in the Psalm, That though their words were smoother than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

After some little time spent in garrisoning the place, and helping the inhabitants to secure what they had left, the English soldiers most of them returned back to Hadley, their head quarters, and Major Pynchon being so full of incumbrances, by reason of the late spoils done to himself, and his neighbours at Springfield, could not any longer attend the service of commanding in chief as he had done before, wherefore being according to his earnest request of the council eased of that burden; Capt. Samuel Appleton was ordered to succeed in taking the charge of the soldiers left in those upper towns, by whose industry, skill and courage, those towns were preserved from running the same fate with the rest, wholly or in part so lately turned into ashes. For the enemy growing very confident by the late successes, came with all their fury the 19th of October following upon Hatfield, hoping no less than to do the like mischief to them, they had newly done to Springfield: But according to the good providence of Almighty God, Major Treat was newly returned to North Hampton, Captain Mosely and Captain Poole were then garrisoning the said Hatfield, and Capt. Appleton for the like end quartering at Hadley, when on a sudden 7 or 800 of the enemy came upon the town in all quarters having first killed or taken two or three of the scouts belonging to the town, and seven more belonging to Capt. Mosely's company: But they were so well entertained on all hands where they attempted to break in upon the town, that they found it too hot for them. Major Appleton with great courage defending one end of the town, and Capt. Mosely as stoutly maintaining the middle, and Capt Poole the other end; that they were by the resolution of the English instantly beaten off, without doing much harm. Capt. Appleton's sergeant was mortally wounded just by his side, another bullet passing through his own hair, by that whisper telling him that death was very near, but did him no other harm. Night coming on, it could not be discerned what loss the enemy sustained, divers were seen to fall, some run through a small river, others cast their guns into the water, it being their manner to venture as much to recover the dead bodies of their friends, as to defend them when alive.

At last after the burning of some few barns with some other buildings, the enemy hasted away as fast as they came on, leaving the English to bless God who had so mercifully delivered them from the fury of their merciless foes, who had in conceit without doubt, devoured them all : But this resolute and valiant repulse, put such a check upon the pride of the enemy, that they made no further attempt upon any of those towns for the present, but winter drawing on, they retired all of them to their general rendezvous at Narrhaganset, where we shall leave them for the present, plotting their general design of accomplishing their intended mischief against the English the next Spring.

Our western plantations upon Connecticut river, where the stage whereon were acted the most remarkable passages of this barbarous war hitherto, which was soon after removed into many other places of the country in the winter and spring following, whither our discourse must in the next place pursue it. There was not any great matter acted by the enemy amongst the plantations upon the great river during the winter, after the assault made upon Hatfield October 19th. It is evident that the body of them returned to Narrhaganset upon the approach of the winter, which set in more early than it used in other years. Where Philip did bestow himself in the winter season is not so certain, some say that he repaired further westward, to try his fortune with those Indians that lie towards Albany, near the Dutch river: Others more probably conceive that he lay hid in some part of the Narrhagan-set country; for though he was not certainly known to be about the fort at Narrhagan-set, when it was taken by our forces in the winter yet as soon as ever they were driven out of the country in February, he was found amongst them that did the mischief at Lancaster in that month.

Some straggling parties of them remained about North Hampton, Westfield and Springfield some time after their defeat at Hatfield: Seven or eight of the inhabitants of North Hampton in the end of October, venturing to fetch in some of their harvest, that was left some where out of town, were in danger of being surprised having laid their arms under their cart, so as being destitute of means to make their defence, they were glad to fly away with the horses out of their carts leaving what they were about to the pleasure of the Indians that assaulted them: Major Treat upon hearing the alarm, presently repaired thither, but could not come time enough to destroy any of the enemy, nor yet to prevent their burning of four or five houses, with two or three barns that stood somewhat out of the town. Within a little time after they killed three of the same town, as they were at work in a meadow not far from the town : They intended also to have burned the mill, but it was too well guarded by two files of musketeers lodged there for the purpose, who put them beside their intent. Six or seven of Springfield soon after going to the mill at Westfield (that which belonged to their own town being burned October 5th) and venturing without arms, three of them were killed by some of the enemy who took the advantage also to burn four or five houses that belonged to the said Westfield : But by the end of November the coast was pretty clear of them unless some few of them that lay lurking in the swamps thereabouts all the winter doing some small mischief upon some out dwellings of Springfield.

The expedition into the Narrhaganset country following in order in the next place to be related ; but before we come thither, a little notice must be taken by the way, of an unsuccessful attempt upon the Indians about Hassanemesit * and Popachuog, whither Capt. Henchman was sent in the beginning of November ; where also Capt. Still was ordered to meet him with another company from Cambridge, with intent to have beat up the Indian quarters in those parts : They being known to have had an hand in the outrages committed upon those that belonged to Marlborough and Mendham, cutting off the scalp of a miller's boy, who is yet alive.

November 1st, 167.—Capt Henschman marched out of Boston, intending to visit the indians about Hassamenesit: The third day they saw some fires of the Indians, yet could not meet with them that made them: The 4th day they marched to some part of the Indian plantations called Hassanemesit: The Captain would have taken up his quarters a mile on this side but some of his officers overruled him, to whose importunity he gave way, and marched a mile further toward the enemy, and by that means saved the miller's youth, taken the week before from Marlborough; for in the morning very early, as the scouts were looking out they spied a wigwam, where some indians that had carried away the youth, had lodged all night, or in some wigwam near by. When the Indians saw our soldiers, they hastened away and left the Marlborough youth behind them, who by that means, escaped their hands. Our men under capt. Henschman marched on to Poppachuog, and finding the Indians all fled; (although they perceived by a messenger, accidentally sent back that the indians followed them all that way they marched) they came back to Mendham to settle things in that town. Some of the inhabitants informed them of some Indian wigwas about ten miles off: The Captain with Philip Curtice, his Lieutenant, resolved to give them a camifado in their wigwarms that night : To that end they mounted 22 upon horses, riding up ten miles into the woods, and when they came near the wigwarms, they dismounted, and intended presently to march up, and give an assault upon them, after they had first made a shout to fright the enemy : They ordered one half to follow the Lieutenant, the other to follow the captain, when they came within a quarter of a mile of the place, their dogs began to bark, at which they stoped, and by marching again, intended presently to fire in upon them, but the captain's foot slipping, he could hardly recover himself, when suddenly looking behind him, he saw no man following of him : The Lieutenant had five behind him, who with those five resolutely fired on that side he was appointed to make the assault upon ; but they were repulsed by the Indians, who firing out of their dens, shot down the Lieutenant and another, the rest presently ran away to a fence : The captain with all vehemency urged them to stay, they replied, they went back only to charge, yet went clear away, by which means, together with the cowardice of the former, so sad a loss befel the company, as could not easily be repaired : However the enemy presently deserted the wigwarm and gave our men the next day an opportunity to fetch off their two dead men, and bury them, and so with grief and shame were constrained to return to their quarters at Mendham, to whose inhabitants they gave notice of 200 bushels of corn belonging to the Indians, that might have been preserved, which for want of hands was lost by the fire, that the enemy might not be benefited thereby. It appears by the foregoing passage, that the time of our deliverance was not yet come, and that God had further trials to acquaint us with before he would turn his hand upon our enemies. But it pleased the Lord in mercy so to order things that they themselves fell into that pit they were digging for others, as shall appear more fully in what follows.

The English plantations about Hadley being for the present set a little at liberty by the Indians drawing off, like seamen after a storm, counted it their best course to repair their tackling against another that may be next coming, wherefore the inhabitants concluded it the safer way to make a kind of barricado about their towns, by setting up pallizadoes or cleft wood, about eight foot long, as it were to break the force of any sudden assault which the Indians might make upon them; which counsel proved very successful; for although it be an inconsiderable defence against a warlike enemy, that hath strength enough, and confidence to besiege a place, yet it is sufficient to prevent any sudden assault of such a timereus and barbarous enemy as these were, for although they did afterwards in the spring break through those pallizadoes at North Hampton, yet as soon as ever they began to be repulsed, they saw themselves like wolves in a pound, that they could not fly away at their pleasure, so as they never adventured to break through afterward upon any of the towns so secured.

As for those of Springfield they were now and then alarmed with a few skulking Indians lurking about in the adjacent woods; as once at the Long Meadow, where half a score of them were seen about an house remote from the town, who were pursued by a party of the English toward Windsor, and so escaped, after the English had made one shot upon them, not knowing certainly how many they killed. So at another time, a few of those barbarous wretches killed a poor man belonging to Springfield, as he was going to his house to look after his corn, on the other side of the river, and after they had killed the man, they burnt down his house; yet attempted no further mischief upon that part of the town that had escaped the fury of the flames, October 5. By which it is evident, that all the number of Indians that had assaulted them before, had withdrawn themselves now to their winter quarters, some to the Dutch River, but the greatest number of them to before were found in the winter at the Narrhaganset fort, where we shall leave them for the present till the forces of the united colonies shall fire them out of their nests.

The soldiers continuing some time at Hatfield after this victory, as we may well call it

(for it seems to have given the first check to the rage of the heathen within the jurisdiction of the united colonies, they have been observed ever since to have been on the loosing hand, seldom or ever daring to meet our soldiers in the open field, unless when they have very great advantage as to their numbers or covert of the woods and bushes: Although like some ranging beasts they have done much mischief several times since, when they were ready to expire, or when the pangs of death were coming upon them) our forces were all called home, save some left for garrisoning the towns thereabouts.

The Commissioners of the united colonies taking into serious consideration the present state of things, viz. that there were before this time so many hundreds gathered together into one body, and that there was great reason to fear, if they were let alone till the next spring they might all rise together as one man round about us and that one after another might easily be destroyed, before any help could be dispatched to them. On the one hand, the sharpness of the winter in these parts was well weighed, so extream that it might hazard the loss of a thousand men in one night, if they were forced to lodge abroad in the open field; as also the difficulty, if not impossibility of sending any relief to them at any distance, the depth of snow usually making the ways unpassable for divers months together.

On the other hand, it was considered, that if the enemy were let alone till the next summer, it would be impossible to deal with them or find them any where, but they might waste one company of soldiers after another, as was seen by the experience of the former year. Considering also that the Narrhagansets, the most numerous of all the rest, and the best provided of provision of all the other Indians, had now declared themselves our enemies, who if they were let alone till the winter was over, we should be unable to deal with so many enemies at once, that could on a sudden on any occasion spread themselves like grasshoppers all over the country.

It was therefore finally agreed upon by the general consent of all, to fall upon the winter quarters of our enemies, by a more considerable army (if I may so call it) gathered out of all the three colonies, and that with all expedition, at farthest not to exceed the 10th of December, before they should have a thousand men in arms, ready for the design.

As for the late league made or rather renewed with the Narrhagansets, it was sufficiently evident and known, that they had all along from the first day when it was confirmed, broken every article of it, especially in not delivering up the enemies, which had sheltered themselves with them all this while, which though they did not positively deny, yet did nothing but find excuses, to defer it one week.

after another, till at the last they would be excused till the next spring upon pretence that they could not before that time get them together. And besides the favouring of those that fled to them, and supplying the whole body of the enemy with victuals, upon all occasions. It was likewise strongly suspected that in all the late proceedings of the enemy, many of their young men were known to be actually in arms against us, many of whom were found either wounded amongst them in their wigwams, or elsewhere occasionally seen returning back, after exploits abroad, to be healed of their wounds at home. Also some of our mens guns that were lost at Deerfield, were found in the fort when it was fired. Therefore all scruples as to the justness and necessity of the war being removed, the only question was, whether it were feasible and expedient in the winter. The exigent was very great, and the choice very hard: But as David when he was streightened with many difficulties at once, choose rather to fall into the hands of God whose mercies were great, though he might be provoked to cause his jealousy, to smother against those of his own heritage for a time; so in this exigent it was generally conceived to be most expedient for the country, to cast themselves upon the providence of a merciful and gracious God, rather than by delays to expose themselves to the treachery and cruelty of a perfidious enemy.

A War thereof speedily to be carried on in the very depth of winter, being agreed upon care was taken for supplies, as the difficulty of such an affair so circumstanced did require, though possibly not with so much necessary care, and so suitable provisions, as had been desired, if what came afterward to pass could have been foreseen (which peradventure might be the reason things went on so heavily for want of well oiling the wheels) in the mean time a small army of a thousand fighting men, well appointed, were ordered by the Commissioners to be gathered by proportion out of all the colonies, of which number the share of the Massachusetts was to be 527, the rest were to be supplied out of Plimouth and Connecticut colonies : All other supplies were taken care for, as well as the suddenness of the expedition, and difficulty of the season would allow. The said thousand men, beside some volunteers of Indian friends, were by the time and place appointed as near as could be had, called together, and a commission granted to the honorable Josiah Winslow, Esq ; the present Governor of Plimouth colony, a man of known ability and integrity, every way so well qualified with courage and resolution, as well as prudence and discretion, as might have preferred him to the conduct of a far greater army than ever is like to be gathered together in this part of the world, in this or in following generations. And indeed as he was the first Governor over any of the united colonies in Newengland, of them that were born in the place so many he will pass for a pattern of any of the succeeding race, that may come after.

Under him as Commander in chief, were ordered six companies from the Massachusetts, under the command of Major Appleton, Capt. Mosely, Capt. Gardiner, Capt. Davenport, Capt. Oliver, and Capt. Johnson; five companies from Connecticut under Major Treat, Capt. Siely, Capt. Gallop, Capt. Mason, Capt. Watts, and Capt. Marshall; two companies from Plimouth, under Major Bradford, and Capt. Goram.

Under the Governor of Plimouth, as Commander in Chief in this expedition, were sent as Major of the forces belonging to each colony; Major Robert Treat, for the forces belonging to Connecticut, and Major Bradford, for those of the colony of Plimouth, and Major Samuel Appleton, for those of the Massachusetts, to whom by the honorable Major General of the colony, were six companies of foot; delivered at Dedham, December the 9th, 1675, containing in number 465 fighting men, besides a troop of horse, under the command of Capt. Thomas Prentice, attending upon them. That night they marched to Woodcock's about 27 miles from Dedham. The next night they arrived at Seaconck, Capt. Mosely and his company went from thence with Mr. Smith by water, the rest ferried over the water to Providence.

The next day, December the 12th, they passed over Patuxet river, and then marching through Pomham's country, at night they met with Capt. Mosely and his company, at Mr. Smith's in Wickford, the place intended for their head quarters. Capt. Mosely in his way thither had happily surprised 36 Indians, one of whom he took along with him as a guide, Peter by name, that was at that time under some disgust with his countrymen, or his Sachem, which made him prove the more real friend to our forces in that service, wherein he faithfully performed what he promised, and without his assistance our men would have been much at a loss to have found the enemy, until it had been too late to have fought them.

Two days after, December 14th, five files of men sent out under serjeant Bennet, and another, upon the scout killed one man and one woman, and brought in four more by one of the clock: The whole company marched after into some of the Sachem's country, where they burnt an 150 wigwams, killed 7 of the enemy, and brought in 8 prisoners when they returned at night.

The next day an Indian called Stone wall John, pretended to come from the Sachems, intimating their willingness to have peace with the English, yet could the messenger hardly forbear threatening, vapouring of their numbers and strength, adding withal that the English durst not fight them: Whatever were pretended by this treacherous fellow, some of his crew as he went home met with some of Capt. Gardner's men, that were stragling about their own business, contrary to order, and slew his serjeant with one or two more. Two also of Capt. Oliver's men were killed in like manner; a solemn warning for soldiers not to be too venturesome in an enemy's country. For preventing the like mischief upon other companies, more care was taken as they passed to the head quarters, some of the companies being lodged three miles therefrom. Capt. Mosely's, Capt. Davenport's & Capt. Oliver's Companies being also sent about that time to bring Major Appleton's to the general quarters, a few desperate Indians creeping under a stone wall near the place, fired twenty or thirty guns at Mosely in particular, a commander well known amongst them, but the rest of the company running down upon them, killed one of them, and scattered the rest.

The next day Capt. Prentice with his troop, being sent to Pettyquamscot, returned with the sad news of burning Jerry Bull's garrison house and killing 10 English men and five women and children, but two escaped in all. This is the chance of war which they who undertook must prepare to undergo.

The next day brought from the same place a little better news, though not enough to balance the sorrow of the former, viz. that Connecticut forces were come thither with three hundred English, and an hundred and fifty

Mohegins, ready fixed to war on the behalf of the English against the Narrhagansets, their mortal enemies; and by the way meeting a party of the enemy, they slew 5 or 6 of them and took as many prisoners. The whole number of all our forces being now come, the want of provision with the sharpness of the cold, minded them of expedition, wherefore the very next day, the whole body of the Massachusetts and Plymouth forces marched away to Pettyquamscot intending to engage the enemy upon the first opportunity that next offered itself: To which resolution those of Connecticut presently consented, as soon as they met together, which was about five o'clock in the afternoon: Bull's house intended for their general rendezvous, being unhappily burnt down two or three days before, there was no shelter left either for officers or private soldiers, so as they were necessitated to march on toward the enemy through the snow, in a cold stormy evening, finding, no other defence all that night, save the open air, nor any other covering than a cold and moist fleece of snow. Through all these difficulties they marched from the break of the next day, December 19th, till one of the clock in the afternoon, without either fire to warm them, or respite to take any food, save what they could chew in their march. Thus having waded fourteen or fifteen miles through the country of the old Queen, or Snuke Squaw of Narrhaganset, they came at 1 o'clock upon the edge of the swamp where their guide assured them they should find Indians enough before night.

Our forces chopping thus upon the seat of the enemy, upon the sudden, they had no time either to draw up in any order or form of battle, nor yet opportunity to consult where or how to assault. As they marched Capt. Mosely and Capt. Davenport led the van, Major Appleton and Capt. Oliver brought up the rear of the Massachusetts forces ; General Winslow with the Plymouth forces marched in the centre ; these of Connecticut came up in the rear of the whole body : But the frontiers discerning Indians in the edge of the swamp, fired immediately upon them who answering our men in the same language, retired presently into the swamp, our men followed them in amain, without staying for the word of command, as if every one were ambitious who should go first, never making any stand till they came to the sides of the fort, into which the Indians that first fired upon them betook themselves.

It seems that there was but one entrance into the fort, though the enemy found many ways to come out, but neither the English or their guide well knew on which side the entrance lay : nor was it easy to have made another ; wherefore the good providence of Almighty God is the more to be acknowledged, who as he led Israel sometimes by the pillar of fire, and the cloud of his presence, a right way through the wilderness, so did he now direct our forces upon that side of the fort, where they might only enter through not without utmost danger and hazard. The fort was raised upon a kind of island of five or six acres of rising land in the midst of a swamp; the sides of it were made of palizadoes, set upright, which was compassed about with an hedge of almost a rod thickness, through which there was no passing unless they could have fired a way through, which then they had no time to do. The place where the Indias used ordinarily to enter themselves, was upon a long tree over a place of water, where but one man could enter at a time, and which was so way-laid that they would have been cut off that had ventured there: But at one corner there was a cap made up only with a long tree, about four or five foot from the ground, over which men might easily pass: But they had placed a kind of a Block house right over against the said tree, from whence they sorely galled our men that first entered, some being shot dead upon the tree, as Capt. Johnson; and some as soon as they entered, as was Capt. Davenport; so as they that first entered were forced presently to retire, and fall upon their bellies the fury of the enemy's shot was pretty well spent, which some companies that did not discern the danger, not observing, lost sundry of their men, but at the last two companies being brought up, besides the four that first marched up, they animated one another, to make another assault, one of the commanders crying out, they run, they run, which did so encourage the soldiers that they presently entered again. After a considerable number were well entered, they presently beat the enemy out of a flanker on the left hand, which did a little shelter our men from the enemy's shot, till more company came up, and so by degrees made up higher, first into the middle, and then into the upper end of the fort, till at last they made the enemy all retire from their sconses, and fortified places, leaving multitudes of their dead bodies upon the place. Connecticut soldiers marching up in the rear, being not aware of the dangerous passage over the tree, in command of the enemy's block house, were at their first entrance many of them shot down, although they came on with as gallant resolution as any of the rest, under the conduct of their wise and valiant leader, Major Treat.

The brunt of the battle, or danger that day lay most upon the commanders whose part it was to lead on their several companies in the very face of death, or else all had been lost; so as all of them with great valour and resolution of mind, as not at all afraid to die in so good a cause, bravely led on their men in that desperate assault; leaving their lives in the place as the best testimony of their valour, and of love to the cause of God and their country: No less than six brave Captains fell that day in the assault, viz. Capt. Davenport, Capt. Gardner, Capt. Johnson, of the Massachusetts, besides Lieutenant Upham, who died some months after of his wounds received at that time. Capt. Gallop also, and Capt. Siely and Capt. Marshall were, slain of those belonging to Connecticut colony. It is usually seen that the valour of the soldiers is much wrapped up in the lives of their Commanders, yet was it found here, that the soldiers were rather engaged than discouraged by the loss of their Commanders, which made them redouble their courage, and not give back after they were entered the second time, till they had driven out their enemies: So after much blood and many wounds dealt on both sides: the English seeing their advantage began to fire the wigwams, where was supposed to be many of the enemies women and children destroyed, by the firing of at least five or six hundred of their smoaky cells.

It is reported by them that first entered the Indians fort, that our soldiers came upon them when they were ready to dress their dinner, but our sudden and unexpected assault put them beside that work, making their cook rooms too hot for them at that time, when they and their mitchin fried together: And probably some of them eat their suppers in a colder place that night: Most of their provisions as well as their huts being then consumed with fire, and those that were left alive forced to hide themselves in a cedar swamp, not far off, where they had nothing to defend them from the cold but boughs of spruce and pine trees; For after two or three hours fight, the English became masters of the place, but not judging it tenable, after they had burned all they could set fire upon, they were forced to retreat, after the day light was almost quite spent, and were necessitated to retire to their quarters, full fifteen or sixteen miles off, some say more, whither with their dead and wounded men they were forced to march, a difficulty scarce to be believed as not to be paralleled almost in any former age.

It is hard to say who acquitted themselves best in that day's service, either the foldiers for their man'like valour in fighting, or the Commanders for their wisdom and courage, leading on in the very face of death. There might one have seen the whole body of that little regimental army, as busy as bees in a hive, some bravely fighting with the enemy, others hauling off and carrying away the dead and wounded men (which I rather note) that none may want the due testimony of their valour and faithfulness, though all ought to say, not unto us, but unto thy name, O Lord, &c..

For though there might not be above three or four hundred at any time within the fort at once, yet the rest in their turns came up to do what the exigence of the service required in bringing off the dead and wounded men:

Massachusetts regiment, together with Captain Mosely, was very serviceable, for by that means the fort being clear of the dead bodies It struck a greater terror into the enemy, to see but eight or ten dead bodies of the English left, than to meet with so many hundreds of their own slain and wounded carcases. The number of the slain was not then known on the enemy's side, because our men were forced to leave them on the ground : But our victory was found afterwards to be much more considerable than at the first was apprehended ; for although our loss was very great, not only because of the desperateness of the attempt itself (in such a season of the year, and at such a distance from our quarters, whereby many of our wounded men perished, which might otherwise have been preserved, if they had not been forced to march so many miles in a cold snowy night, before they could be dressed) yet the enemy lost so many of their principal fighting men, their provision also was by the burning of their wigwams, so much of it spoiled at the taking of their fort, and by surprizing so much of their corn about that time also ; that it was the occasion of their total ruin afterwards : They being at that time driven away from their habitations, and put by from planting for the next year, as well as deprived of what they had in store for the present winter. What numbers of the enemy were slain is uncertain, it was confessed by one Potock, a great Coun-cellor amongst them, afterwards taken at Rhode Island, and put to death at Boston, that the Indians lost 700 fighting men that day, besides 300 that died of their wounds, the most of them : The number of old men, women and children, that perished either by fire, or that were starved with hunger and cold, none of them could tell. There was above 80 of the English slain, and 150 wounded, that recovered afterwards.

There were several circumstances in this victory very remarkable.

First, The meeting with one Peter a fugitive Indian, that upon some discontent, flying from the Narrhagansets, offered himself to the service of the English, and did faithfully perform what he promised, viz. to lead them to the swamp where the Indians had seated themselves within a fort raised upon an island of firm earth, in the midst of a swamp, whither none of the English could have piloted them without his assistance, the place being near eighteen miles from the place where they were quartered.

Secondly, Their being by a special providence directed just to a place where they found so easy entrance, which if they had missed they could never have made a way through the hedge, with which they had surrounded the pallizadoes of the fort in half a day's time.

And Thirdly, If they had entered by the way left by the Indians for passage, they might have been cut off, before they could have come near their fortification.

Lastly, In directing their motion to begin the assault just at the day they did, for if they had deferred but a day longer, there fell such a storm of snow the next day, that they could not have passed through it in divers weeks after : And on a sudden there fell such a thaw, that melted away both ice and snow, so that if they had deferred till that time, they could have found no passage into their fortified place.

All which considerations put together, make it a signal favour of God to carry them through so many difficulties to accomplish their desired end. For after they were retired to their quarters, but sixteen miles from that place, there was so great want of provision, the vessels being frozen in at the harbour about Cape Cod, that should have brought them relief, and the frost and snow set in so violently, that it was not possible for them, with all the force they could make (so many of their ablest soldiers being slain and wounded) to have made another onset : But the goodness of Almighty God was most of all to be admired, that notwithstanding all the hardships they endured that winter, in very cold lodgings, hard marches, scarcity of provision, yet not one man was known to die by any disease or bodily distemper, save them that perished of their wounds.

Our forces being compelled by the aforesaid occasions, to lie still some weeks after, hoped also that the enemy so sorely broken, would gladly have sued for peace : But as was said of old, God hardened their hearts to their own ruin and destruction afterwards. For as soon as our soldiers were able to march, finding that all the enemy's overtures of peace, and prolonging of treaties, was only to gain time, that they might get away into the woods ; they pursued after them, and sometimes came upon their rear, but then they would immediately fly an hundred ways at once into swamps, so as our men could not follow them, or if they did, could not see two of them together ; so that now there was little good like to be done, unless they could take them at some advantage. At length having spent all their provision, and tiring themselves in pursuing of them sixty or seventy miles, up through the woods towards Marlborough and Lancaster, towa's that lye on the road to Connecticut, having killed and taken near 70 of them, our soldiers were ordered to return towards Boston, to recruit themselves, supposing that the Narrhagansets, and those with them were so enfeebled that they would have no mind suddenly to assault any of the English towns.

If any desire a more particular account of the loss which we sustained at the taking of the Narrahaganset fort, December 19th, 1675, they may take it as here it follows :

Besides the six captains mentioned before that either were slain in the assault, or died afterwards of their wounds, to whom may be reckoned Lieutenant Upham, that died lately at Boston, of the wounds he then received.

If there had not been so great a distance between the place of the fight and their quarters, and so much cold attending them in their retiring thereunto, some better account might have been given of that expedition, than now they were able to do. For a March of sixteen or eighteen miles is too much to breathe a fresh soldier, unless he were well mounted ; but enough to kill the heart of them that have been wearied with a long and tedious fight. As for the coldness of the weather although it be a good besom to sweep the chamber of the air (which might be the reason there was no more diseases amongst them) yet it is an unwelcome companion to wearied, especially to wounded men, in so long a retreat.

But the want of provision falling in, in conjunction which the unseasonableness of the weather, and length of the way, hindred our forces from any new attempt upon the enemy, which if they could have attended, it was thought it might have put an end to our troubles : but he that holdeth the scales of the victory in his hand, turneth them to which side, and by what degrees pleaseth him best.

The rest of the winter was spent in fruitless treaties about a peace ; both sides being well wearied with the late desperate fight, were willing to refresh themselves the remaining part of the winter, with the short slumber of a pretended peace, at least with a talk or dream thereof : Our Commanders aim therein was christian and good, if it had proceeded, sc. to have prevented the shedding of more blood : And possibly some of the elder and wiser of the enemy, did really desire what was pretended by them, all (for they had now full proof of the valour and resolution of the English, which some of them upon former successes might be ready to question) and they could not but see their destruction already begun, in the loss of their dwellings, and all their provisions, as well as the slaughter of the best part of their fighting men; but through consciousness of their barbarous treachery and falsehood, they could not trust others, and so were willing to run the utmost hazard, as people hardened to their own destruction. The particular passages of the treaty being carried on by the enemy only in pretence, and by our men (that soon discerned their fraud) rather out of necessity, to conceal their incapacity of engaging them anew, than any real expectation of a good effect, are not worthy the relating. However, though the spot were unable to do any service in the depth of the snow, and sharpness of the cold, the troop was sent out upon all occasions to scout about the country, who brought in daily much of the enemy's corn and beans, which they had hid in barns under the ground, or at least kept them from making use of their own provision, or spoiling the English cattle; now and then also bringing in prisoners from their quarters, as they were stragling about to get victuals.

On the 27th of December, Capt. Prentice was sent into Pomham's country, where he burnt near an hundred wigwags, but found never an Indian in any of them.

On the 28th of December, a squaw was sent to them, who had been taken in the fight, with a proffer of peace, if they would submit to such terms as were propounded; the principal of which was, the delivering up all Philip's Indians that were with them; the Squaw returned, not pretending that she was lame and unable to come again; but the 30th of December, an Indian came from the Sachems, with seeming thanks for the peace proffered, yet complained we made war upon them, and gave them no notice; but his mouth was soon stopped, by the answer they made him: He owned, as the Squaw had said before, that they lost 300 of their best fighting men, and so did two prisoners of theirs, taken January the 14th whereof one being of Philip's company, was put to death. The messenger that was sent was fairly dismissed, with the express mention of what terms they must expect, if they desired a peace.

January 4th, there came two messengers from them, as they said to make way for a treaty of peace; who laid the blame upon Canonchet, that came to Boston in October last, to confirm the peace with the Commissioners of the united colonies, as if he had misinformed them, viz. that they were not by the former treaty to have delivered up the Wompanoogs, or Philip's Indians, until the said Canonchet's brother, one of the hostages at Hartford, was released. This was but a mere pretence, for he and they too, better understood the particulars of the agreement: For, by chance the articles which they had of the peace concluded with them, were found open (whether purposely or accidentally was not known) in a wigwarm in the fort, when it was taken, so as they could not be ignorant of the articles of the agreement.

January 5th, an English child of about three or four years old, taken from Warwick, was sent in to put the better pretence upon the treaty mentioned.

January 8th, the messengers were sent back, and told what they must trust to. In the afternoon a messenger came from Ninigret, the old Sachem of Narrhaganset, who brought a letter from Mr. Stanton, the interpreter, signifying the reality of the said Ninigret, his friendship to the English, and the streights of the enemy, that corn was two shillings a pint with them. Yet notwithstanding all their difficulties, they rather delayed the time till they could get away, than really endeavoured the making a peace, as was soon manifest: For that young insolent Sachem, Canonchet, and Panoquin, said they would fight it out to the last man, rather than they would become servants to the English.

January 10th, fresh supplies of soldiers came up from Boston, wading through a sharp storm of snow, that bit some of them by the heels with the frost. The next day one that came with them, going out with the scouts, fell amongst the Indians barns, in one of which, as he was groping to find corn for the relief of his horse, he caught hold of an Indian's hair, under the leaves, who presently held up his hands, when the soldier was drawing his sword, to spare his life, which was granted, but after he was brought to the headquarters, he would own nothing but what was forced out of his mouth, by the woolding of his head with a cord; wherefore he was presently judged to die as a Wompanoog.

January 12th, another messenger came from Canonicus, desiring the space of a month longer, wherein to issue the treaty, which so provoked the Commander of our forces, that they resolved to have no more treaties with the enemy, but prepare to assault them, with God's assistance, as soon as ever the season would permit, and it was high time to take up that resolution, for within a few days after they understood by some that were taken prisoners, that the enemy were gone, or going into the Nipmuck country.

Within a few days after, about the 16th of January, the scouts brought in one Joshua Tift, a renegado Englishman, of Providence, that upon some discontent among his neighbours, had turned Indian, married one of the Indian squaws, renounced his religion, nation, and natural parents, all at once, fighting against them. He was taken by Capt. Fenner, of Providence, who with some of his neighbours were pursuing some Indians that had driven away their cattle. This Tift being one of the company, was wounded in the knee, and so was seized by the English; he had in his habit conformed himself to them amongst whom he lived. After examination, he was condemned to die the death of a traitor. As to his religion he was found as ignorant as an heathen, which no doubt caused the fewer tears to be shed at his funeral, flanders by being unwilling to lavish pity upon him that had divested himself of nature itself, as well as religion, in a time when so much pity was needed elsewhere, and nothing left besides wherewith to relieve the sufferers.

January 21st, Capt. Prentice's troops being abroad, met with a party of the enemy, of whom they took two prisoners, and killed nine; in which exploit, something happened very remarkable, for one W. Dodge, of Salem, riding in company with another friend, they happened to meet with two Indians, the said Dodge being better horsed than his friend, made after the foremost, leaving his friend to deal with the hindmost, but his pistol missed firing, whereupon the Indian taking him by the leg, turned him off his horse, and getting upon him, was about killing him with his knife, which W. Dodge by chance espied, and came time enough to rescue his friend, and dispatch the Indian lying upon him, and yet overtook the first Indian he was pursuing, time enough to do his business also: By that means he did three good offices at once, saved the life of one friend, and slew two of his enemies. But within two or three days after, the weather much altering from what it was, induced our forces to take the first opportunity to pursue the enemy who as they understood by messengers from Providence, were now upon their flight into the Nipmuck country : But so many difficulties were cast in their way, that they could not be ready time enough to prevent the mischief they did at warwick, as they took their farewell of their country : For.

January 27th, they dispoiled Mr. Carpenter of two hundred sheep, and fifty head of neat cattle, and fifteen horses ; all which they drove along with them, and were gone too far to be rescued before our forces set out. Two that belonged to the said Carpenter were wounded and one of the enemy's slain. As they marched after the enemy, they found a good house burned, with a barn belonging to it. They perceived also that the enemy dealt much in horse flesh; meeting with no less than sixty horses heads in one place, which they had left behind them. Our soldiers in their pursuit, came upon their rear, killed and took about seventy of them, yet never could come to charge them, for they would presently betake themselves into swamps, and not two of them run together, so as they saw it was an endless work to proceed further in the chase of such an enemy ; but our forces having pursued them into the woods, between Marlborough and Brookfield, in the road toward Connecticut, were constrained to turn down to Boston, in the beginning of February, for want of provision, both for themselves and their horses, which gave an occasion to the loss of those lesser towns that were destroyed by the Nipnet Indians, who presently joined with the Narrhagansets, upon their first approach, as shall be related afterwards.

About the 10th of February after, some hundreds of the Indians, whether Nipnets or Nashaway men (is uncertain) belonging to him they call Sagamore Sami, and possibly some of the stoutest of the Narrhagansets that had escaped the winter brunt, fell upon Lancaster, a small village, of about fifty or sixty families, and did much mischief, burning most of the houses that were not garrisoned: And which is most sad and awful to consider, the house of Mr. Rowlandson, minister of the said Lancaster, which was garrisoned with a competent number of the inhabitants; yet the fortification of the house being on the back side, closed up with fire wood, the Indians got so near as to fire a leanter, which burning the house immediately to the ground, all the persons therein were put to the hard choice, either to perish by the flames, with the house, or to yield themselves into the hands of those cruel savages, which last (considering that a living dog is better than a dead lion) they chose, and so were forty two persons surprised by the Indians, above twenty of the women and children they caried away captive, a rueful spectacle to behold; the rest being men, they killed in the place, or reserved for further misery: And many that were not slain in fighting, were killed in attempting to escape. The minister himself was occasionally absent, to seek help from the Governor and Council to defend that place, who returning, was entertained with the tragical news of his wife and children surprized, and being carried away by the enemy, and his house turned into ashes, yet it pleased God so to uphold his heart, comforting himself in his God as David at Ziklag, that he would always say, he believed he should see his wife and children again, which did in like manner soon come to pass within five or six months after; all save the youngest, which being wounded at the first, died soon after, among the Indians.

And such was the goodness of God to those poor captive women and children, that they found so much favor in the sight of their enemies, that they offered no wrong to any of their persons save what they could not help, being in many wants themselves. Neither did they offer any uncivil carriage to any of the females, nor ever attempted the chastity of any of them, either being restrained of God, as was Abimeleck of old, or by some other accidental cause which withheld them from doing any wrong in that kind.

Upon the report of this disaster, Capt. Wadsworth, then at Marlborough, with about forty resolute men, adventuring the rescuing of the town that was remaining: And having recovered a bridge, they got over safe, though the planks were pulled off by the enemy, and being led up in a way, not discovered by them, they forced the Indians for the present to quit the place, after they had burnt and destroyed the better half of it. Yet afterwards it not being judged tenable, it was abandoned to the pleasure of the insulting foe.

Ten days after they were so flushed with this success, that two or three hundred of them came wheeling down to Medfield a town twenty miles from Boston, westward from Dedham, which they surprized very early in the morning (and though there were one hundred and sixty soldiers in it, or more, besides the inhabitants) they burnt near one half of the town, killing about twenty persons, but by the resistance of the soldiers, as soon as they could be rallied together (it being at or before break of day, none in the least suspecting such an assault so early) they were quickly forced to forsake the place, and so (not without some loss) took their way to Plimouth colony.

The western towns above Connecticut were the chief seat of the war, and felt most of the mischief thereof, in the end of the year 1675; but the scene is now to be changed; and the other towns and villages that lye eastward, nearer Boston, must bear their part in the like tragedies : For as was said before, the Narrhagansets having been driven out of the country, fled through the Nipnet plantations, towards Watchuset hills, meeting with all the Indians that had harboured all winter in those woods about Nashaway, they all combined against the English, yet divided their numbers, and one half of them were observed to bend their course toward Plimouth, taking Medfield in their way which they endeavoured to burn and spoil, February 21, 1675, as their fellows had done Lancaster ten days before.

The surprisal of this Medfield, in regard of some remarkable circumstances it was attended with, is not unworthy a more particular relating as to the manner thereof : The loss of Lancaster had sufficiently awakened and alarmed the neighbouring villages, all to stand upon their guard ; and some had obtained garrisoned soldiers for their greater security, as was the case with them the town of Medfield, within twenty two miles of Boston. And at that time were lodged therein several garrison soldiers, besides the inhabitants ; yet being billeted up and down in all quarters of the town, could be gathered together till a great part of the town was set on fire and many of the inhabitants slain, which how it could be effected is strange to believe : But most of those inland plantations being overrun with young wood (the inhabitants being very apt to engross more land into their hands than they were able to subdue) as if they were seated in the midst of a heap of bushes : Their enemies took the advantage thereof, and secretly over night, conveyed themselves round about the town, some getting under the sides of their barns, and fences of their orchards, as is supposed, where they lay hid under that covert, till break of day, when they suddenly set upon sundry houses, shooting them that came first out of their doors, and then fired their houses where the inhabitants were repaired to garrisons, were fit for the purpose : Some were killed as they attempted to fly to their neighbours for shelter. Some were only wounded, and some taken alive and carried captive : In some houses the husband running away with one child, the wife with another, of whom the one was killed, the other escaped. They began at the east end of the town, where they fired the house of one Samuel Morse, that seems to have been a signal to the rest, to fall in on other parts : Most of the houses in the west, or southwest end of the town, were soon burnt down : And generally when they burnt any out houses, the cattle in them were burnt also. Two mills belonging to the town, were burnt also. A poor old man of near an hundred years old, was burnt in one of the houses that were consumed by fire. The Lieutenant of the town, Adams by name, was shot down by his door, and his wife mortally wounded by a gun fired afterwards accidentally into the house. After the burning of forty or fifty houses and barns, the Cannibals were frightened away out of the town, over a bridge that lies upon Charles River, by the shooting of a piece of ordinance two or three times : When they had passed over the bridge, they fired one end thereof, to hinder our men from pursuing them, they were thought to be above five hundred ; there were slain and mortally wounded, seventeen or eighteen persons, besides others dangerously hurt. The loss sustained by the inhabitants amounted to above two thousand pounds. This mercy was observed in this sad providence, that never a garrison house was lost in this surprisal ; nor any of the principal dwellings, so as the chiefest and best of their buildings escaped the fury of the enemy, who as they passed the bridge, left a writing behind them, expressing something to this purpose, that we had provoked them to wrath, and that they would fight with us these twenty years (but they fell short of their expectation by nineteen, adding also, that they had nothing to loose, whereas we had houses, barns, and corn : These were some of the bold threats used by the barbarous crew, but their rage shall proceed no further than the counsel of God had determined. The week before was heard a very hideous cry of a kennel of wolves round the town, which raised some of the inhabitants, and was looked upon by divers persons, as an ominous presaging of the following calamity.

Another assault was feared, but as soon as the soldiers could be gathered together, they turned their backs, as if they never intended to visit them more : whither these Indians went when they left Medfield, is not so certainly known ; the soldiers in the town not having opportunity to pursue them over the river, by reason that the bridge was part of it burned : But it is most probable that they took their way toward Plimouth, and continued about that side of the country for the future, waiting opportunities to do what mischief they could to the English in those parts : For within a month after this assault of Medfield, there was near six hundred of them seen about Patuxet and Providence, where Capt. Pierce, with about fifty of his men were lost, though with no great advantage to the enemy, who at that time lost above double that number : Our worthy Captains in this and other exploits, being called to imitate Sampson, who was content to die with his enemies, that he might overthrow them thereby : It having so fallen out with many of our choice Commanders and soldiers at Deerfield, Narrhaganset, Patuxet, and likewise not long after at Sudbury.

The Governor and Council of Plimouth perceiving by the report of these outrages committed upon the towns of the Massachusetts, that they were like to be visited this spring by their old neighbours, sent out Capt. Pierce, of Scituate, about the latter end of March with about fifty English, and twenty of their christian Indians, about Cape Cod, who proved none of his worst soldiers, as the sequel of this his last expedition will declare.

Capt. Pierce, as is said before, being sent out to pursue the enemy, marched towards Patuxet, where he understood the Indians were many of them gathered together : He being a man of resolute courage, was willing to engage them, though upon never so great a disadvantage : Some say the Indians by counterfeiting, drilled him into a kind of ambush ; possibly more of them discovered themselves after he began to engage than he was aware of ; and being got over the river in pursuit of them, where he discovered so great a number of them, he drew down towards the side of the river, hoping the better by that means to prevent their surrounding of him ; but that proved his overthrow which he intended as his greatest advantage : For the Indians getting over the river so galled him from thence, that he was not able to defend himself ; thus assaulted on all sides, and himself not being able to travel much a foot, was thereby hindered from retiring to any better place in time, so as he saw himself constrained to fight it out to the last, which he did with most undaunted courage, and as is said, to the slaughter of an hundred and forty of his enemies, before himself and his company were cut off. It is said also, that being apprehensive of the danger he was in, by the great numbers of the enemy like to overpower him with their multitude, he sent a messenger timely enough to Providence, for relief, but as Solomon saith, a faithful messenger is as snow in harvest, another is as smoak to the eyes, and vinegar to the teeth. (Whether through sloth or cowardice, is not much material) this message was not delivered to them to whom it was immediately sent ; by accident only some of Rehoboth understanding of the danger, after the evening exercise (it being on the Lord's day, March 26th, 1676) repaired to the place, but then it was too late to bring help, unless it were to be spectators of the dead carcases of their friends, and to perform the last office of love to them.

It is worth the noting, what faithfulness and courage some of the christian Indians, with the said Capt. Pierce, shewed in the fight : One of them, whose name was Amos, after the Captain was shot in his leg or thigh, so as he was not able to stand any longer, would not leave him, but charging his gun several times, fired stoutly upon the enemy, till he saw that there was no possibility for him to do any further good to Capt. Pierce, not yet to save himself, if he stayed any longer ; therefore he used this policy, perceiving the enemy had all blackened their faces, he also stooping down pulled out some blacking out of a pouch he carried with him, discoloured his face therewith, and so making himself look as like Hobamackco, as any of his enemies, he ran amongst them a little while, and was taken for one of them, as if he had been searching for the English, until he had an opportunity to escape away among the bushes; therein imitating the cuttle fish, which when it is pursued, or in danger casteth out its body a thick humour, as black as ink, thro' which it passes away unseen by the pursuer.

It is reported of another of these Cape Indians (friends to the English of Plimouth) that being pursued by one of the enemy, he betook himself to a great rock, where he sheltered himself for a while, at least perceiving that his enemy lay ready with his gun on the other side, to discharge upon him, as soon as he fired never so little away from the place where he stood: In the issue he thought of this politic stratagem to save himself, and destroy his enemy (for as Solomon said of old, wisdom is better than weapons of war) he took a stick, and hung his hat upon it, and then by degrees gently lifted it up, till he thought it would be seen, and so become a fit mark for the other that watched to take aim at him: The other taking it to be his head, fired a gun and shot through the hat; which our christian Indian perceiving, boldly held up his head and discharged his own gun upon the real head, not the hat, of his adversary, whereby he shot him dead upon the place, and so had liberty to march away with the spoils of his enemy.

The like subtle device was used by another of the Cape Indians at the same time, being one of them that went out with Capt. Pierce; for being in like manner pursued by one of Philip's Indians, as the former was, he nimbly got behind the butt end of a tree newly turned up by the roots, which carried a considerable breadth of the surface of the earth along with it (as is very usual in these parts where the roots of the trees lye deep in the ground) which stood above the Indian's height, in form of a large shield, only it was somewhat too heavy to be easily removed; the enemy Indian lay with his gun ready to shoot him down upon his first deserting his station; but a subtle wit taught our christian Netop a better device, for boring a little hole through this his broad shield, he discerned his enemy who could not so easily discern him; a good musketier need never desire a fairer mark to shoot at, whereupon discharging his gun, he shot him down: What can be more just than that he should be killed, who lay in wait to kill another man? neque enim lex justior alla est, quam necis artifices arte perire sua.

Instances of this nature shew the subtlety and dexterousness of these natives, if they were improved in seats of arms: And possibly if some of the English had not been too shy in making use of such of them as were well affected to their interest, they need never have suffered so much from their enemies; it having been found upon late experience, that many of them have proved not only faithful, but very serviceable and helpful to the English; they usually proving good seconds, though they have not ordinarily confidence enough to make the first onset. But to return to the proceedings of the Indians towards Plimouth.

February 25th, they assaulted Weymouth, and burnt seven or eight houses and barns there, which Weymouth is a town lying towards Plimouth colony.

March 12th, following they assaulted the house of one Mr. Clarke, in Plimouth, cruelly murdering eleven persons that belonged to two families that lodged therein, and then fired the house. The cruelty towards these persons was the more remarkable, in that they had often received much kindness from the said Clarke. It is the custom of such debtors, to use them worst, of whom they have taken up much kindness upon trust before hand.

March 17th, another party of them fell upon Warwick, a place beyond Philip's land, toward the Narrhaganset country, where they burnt down to the ground all but a few houses, which they left standing as a monument of their barbarous fury. The like mischief was acted by them upon the houses of the English remaining in the Narrhaganset country.

This 26th day of March, being the first day of the week, as the first of the year after our Julian account, seemed ominous at the first, on fundry accounts, threatening a gloomy time, yet proved in the issue, but as a lowering morning before a lightsome day.

For besides the burning of Marlborough, at least a great part of it, on the same day, a very sad accident fell out the same time at Springfield, as shall be specified hereafter; besides that which befell Captain Pierce, which is already related, with whom fell so many of his soldiers on the same day also; yet had the enemy no cause to boast, being forced by the valour of the English, to give so many of their own lives in exchange: Some few made their escape, as is said, by subtle devices: Besides the three forementioned, another by a like shift, not only saved himself, but helped an Englishman to escape also, whom he ran after, with his hatchet in his hand, as if he were about to kill him; whereby both of them made a shift to get away; the rest were all lost (the unfaithfulness of the messenger being as was intimated before, the cause of their slaughter) unto a few that hardly escaped by the advantage of the bushes, giving them opportunity to pass unseen, yet was it confessed by a prisoner of the enemy, taken afterward by the English, that they lost an hundred and forty in that encounter: And had not the said English by wading after the enemy over a river, made their ammunition useless, there had not half so many of them been cut off. From thence they turned back towards Rehoboth, near Swanzy, when on March 28th, they burnt thirty barns, and near upon forty dwelling houses, thereby as it were threatening the utter desolation of that poor town ; and so proceeding on that side the country, they burnt the very next day about thirty houses in Providence, in their way toward Narrhaganset.

But it was now full sea with Philip's affairs, for soon after the tide of his successes began to turn about the sea coast, which made way for the falling of the water up higher in the country. For about this time news came to Boston that our neighbours and friends of Connecticut colony, hearing of the attempts of the enemy on that side of the country, sent a party of their soldiers, under the command of Capt. George Denison, with some friendly Indians, part Mohegins and Pequods part Nianticks, belonging to Ninigret, a Narrhaganset Sachem, who never engaged in this quarrel against the English ; who in pursuit of the enemy, meeting with a considerable part of them about the Narrhaganset country, killed and took forty five of them, without the loss of their own men. This victory was the more considerable, in that several of the chief Captains of the enemy were at this time killed or taken ; amongst whom was Canonchet (who came down to get seed corn to plant at Squakheag) he was the chief Sachem of all the Narrhagansets, the son of Miantonimo, and the heir of all his father's pride and insolence, as well as of his malice, against the English, a most perfidious villain, who had the last October been at Boston, pretending to make a firm peace with the English, but never intending to keep one article thereof: Therefore, as a just reward of his wickedness he was adjudged by those that took him to die, which was accordingly put in execution at Stonington, whither he was carried; there his head being cut off, was carried to Hartford: The Mohegins and Pequods that had the honor to take him prisoner, having the honor likewise of doing justice upon him, and that by the prudent advice of the English Commanders, thereby the more firmly to engage the said Indians against the treacherous Narrhagansets. There are differing reports about the manner of his taking, and by whom, whether the Indians or the English first took him; however, it was sufficient matter of rejoicing to all the colonies of the English, that the ringleader of almost all this mischief, and great incendiary betwixt the Narrhagansets and us, died himself by that sword of war which had drawn a gainst others.

Concerning the Narrhagansets, this is further to be added here, that Mr. Thomas Stanton, and his son Robert, who have a long time lived amongst them, and best acquainted with their language and manners of any in New England do affirm, that to their knowledge, the Narrhaganset Sachems before the late troubles, had two thousand fighting men under them, and nine hundred arms, yet they are at this day so broken and scattered, that there is none of them left on that side of the country, unless some few, not exceeding seventy in number, that have sheltered themselves under the inhabitants of Rhode Island, as a merchant of that place, worthy of credit, lately affirm to the writer hereof. It is considerable by what degrees they have been consumed and destroyed.

The first week in April, 1676, Canonchet, their chief Sachem, having with this people been driven out of his own country, by the sword of the English, the winter before, breathed still nothing but rage and cruelty against them, bearing himself upon his great numbers; Yet as appeared in the issue, himself and they that escaped with him, were not much preserved from the present calamity that beset the rest in their fort, as reserved to another and more ignominious death. For the whole body of the Indians to the westward, trusting under the shadow of that aspiring bramble; he took a kind of care of them upon himself: wherefore foreseeing so many hundreds could not well subsist without planting, he propounded it in his council, that all the west plantations upon Connecticut river, taken from the English, should this last summer be planted with Indian corn; which was indeed in itself a very prudent consideration. To that end he resolved to venture himself with but thirty men

(the rest declining it) to fetch seed corn from Seaconk, the next town to Mount hope, leaving a body of men, not fewer than fifteen hundred to follow him, or meet him about Seaconk the week after. The adventure brought him into the snare, from whence he could not escape : For Capt. George Denison, of Stonington, and Capt. Avery, of New London, having raised forty seven English, the most part volunteers, with eighty Indians, twenty of which were Narrhagansets, belonging to Ninigret, commanded by one called Catapazet ; the rest Pequods, under Casasinamon, and Mohegins under Oneco, son to Uncas, being now abroad upon their third expedition, which they began March 27th, 1676, and ended on the 10th of April following : They met with a stout Indian of the enemy's whom they presently slew, and two old squaws, that confessed Nanunttenoo, alias Canonchet (those chief Sachems usually changing their names at every great dance, and by that name of Nanunttenoo was he then known) was not far off ; which welcome news put new life into the wearied soldiers, that had travelled hard many days, and met with no booty till now ; especial when it was confirmed by intelligence the same instant, brought in by their scouts, that they met with new tracks, which brought them in view of some called Blackstone's river, in one of which the said Sachem was at that momont diverting himself with the recital of Capt. Pierce's slaughter, surprized

by his men a few days before, but the alarm of the English at that time heard by himself, put by that discourse, appalled with the suddenness thereof, as if he had been informed by secret item from Heaven, that now his own turn was come; so as having but 7 men about him, he sent up two of them to the top of the hill, to see what the matter was, but they affrighted with the near approach of the English, at that time with great speed mounting over a fair champaigna on the other side of the hill, ran by, as if they wanted time to tell what they saw; presently he sent a third, who did the like; then sending two more on the same errand, one of these last endued with more courage, or a better sense of his duty, informed him in great haste that all the English army was upon him; whereupon, having no time to consult, and but little to attempt an escape, and no means to defend himself; he began to dodge with his pursuers, running round the hill on the contrary side; but as he was running so hastily by, Catapazet, with twenty of his followers, and a few of the English, lightest of foot, guessed by the swiftness of his motion, that he fled as if an enemy, which made them immediately take the chace after him, as for their lives; he that was the swifter pursuer put him so hard to it, that he cast off first his blanket, then his silver laced coat (given him at Boston, as a pledge of their friendship, upon the renewal of his league in October before) and belt of peag, which made Catapazet conclude it was the right bird, which made them pursue as eagerly as the other fled ; so as they forced him to take to the water, through which as he over hastingly plunged his foot slipping upon a stone, it made him fall into the water so deep, as it wet his gun, upon which accident, he confessed soon after, that his heart and his bowels turned within him, so as he became like a rotten stick; void of strength insomuch as one Moncpoide a Pequod, swiftest of foot, laid hold of him within thirty rod of the river side, without his making any resistance ; though he was a very proper man, of goodly stature, & great courage of mind, as well as strength of body ; one of the first English that came up with him, was Robert Stanton, a young man that scarce had reached the twenty second year of his age, yet adventuring to ask him a question or two, to whom this manly Sachem looking with a little neglect upon his youthful face, replied in broken English, you much child, no understand matters of war ; let your brother, or your chief come, him I will answer, and was as good as his word ; acting herein, as if by a Pythagorean metempsychosis, some old Roman ghost had possessed the body of this western Pagan ; and like Atilius Regulus, he would not accept of his own life, when it was tendered him, upon that (in his account) low condition of compliance with the English, refusing to send an old Counsellor of his to make any motion that way, saying he knew the Indians would not yield ; but more probably he was not willing they should, choosing rather to sacrifice his own, and his peoples lives, to his private humour of revenge, than timely to provide for his own, and their safety, by entertaining the counsels of a peace, so necessary for the general good of all : He continuing in the same obstinate resolution, was carried soon after to Stonington, where he was shot to death by some of his own quality, sc. the young Sachem of the Mohegins, and two of the Pequods, of like quality. This was the confusion of a damned wretch, that had often opened his mouth to blaspheme the name of the living God, and those that make profession thereof. He was told at large of his breach of faith, and how he boasted he would not deliver up a Wampanoog, or the paring of a Wampanoog's nail, that he would burn the English alive in their houses ; to which he replied, others were as forward for the war as himself ; and that he desired to hear no more thereof. And when he was told his sentence was to die, he said, he liked it well, that he should die before his heart was soft, or had spoken any thing unworthy of himself. He told the English before they put him to death, that the killing him would not end the war ; but it was a considerable step thereunto, nor did it live much longer after his death, at least not in those parts ; for after Sudbury fight, when the sun of their hopes was at its highest ; April the 18th following, it visibly declined, till it set in a night of obscure and utter darkness upon them all, as is to be feared.

The inhabitants of New London, Norwich and Stonington, apprehensive of their danger, by reason of the near bordering of the enemy, and upon other prudent considerations, voluntarily listed themselves under some able gentlemen, and resolute soldiers, amongst themselves, Major Palmes, Capt. George Denison, Cap^t. Avery, with whom, or under whom, within the compass of the year 1676, they made ten or more several expeditions, in all which, at those several times, they killed and took two hundred and thirty nine of the enemy, by the help and assistance of the Pequods Mohegins, and a few friendly Narrhagansets; besides thirty taken in the long march homeward, after the fort fight, December 19th, 1675; and besides sixteen captivated in the second expedition, not reckoned within the compass of the said number; together with fifty guns, and spoiling the enemy of an hundred bushels of corn.

In January they went again in pursuit, and took five men and a boy. Certain Nipnets intended to have sheltered themselves under Uncas; but he perceiving it would be distasteful to the English, soon shabbed them off, so as they were in the beginning of the winter brought into Boston, many of them by Peter Ephraim, and Andrew Pityme, with their fellows.

In all which exploits, neither they, nor any of their followers sustained any loss by the sword of the enemy, or sickness; as is expressly declared by the Reverend Minister of Stonington, Mr. James Noyce, which is a matter very admirable to consider, engaging all that were any way concerned in such signal testimonies of divine favour, to be ready to pay her vows to the Most High, who alone teacheth the hands of his people to war, and their fingers to fight.

Not long after Capt. George Denison, of Stonington, with sixty six volunteers, and an hundred and twelve Pequods, killed and took seventy six of the enemy, amongst whom were two Narrhaganset Sachems, one of which was the grand child of Pomham (who is accounted the most warlike, and the best soldier of all the Narrhaganset Sachems) taking at the same time 160 bushels of the enemy's corn, no small damage to our enemies at that time, and all this without the loss of one man the said Captain's followers.

The greater mischief which after this time was done by the enemy in Plymouth colony, was by burning of houses and barns, which they might easily do, the inhabitants in most of those towns being repaired to garrison houses for their greater security: For about the 20th of April, fifty of the enemy burnt about nineteen houses and barns at Scituate, but were so resolutely encountered by a few of the inhabitants, that they were driven away, and thereby prevented from doing of further mischief.

Not long after, May 8th, they burnt about seventeen houses and barns in Bridgewater, a small town in Plymouth colony, twelve miles on this side Taunton; but it pleased God just at the time to send a thunderhower, which put out the fire, or else it might have prevailed much further.

It is very remarkable, that the inhabitants of the said Bridgewater, never yet lost one person by the sword of the enemy, though the town is situate within Plymouth colony, yet they have helped to destroy many of the enemy. None knows either love or hatred by all that is before them in things of this nature; nor ought standers by that may escape, think themselves less sinners than those that so perish by the sword of the enemy: Yet about this time four of the inhabitants of Taunton were killed as they were at their work in the field, whereby it is said thirty children were made fatherless: So unsearchable are the judgments of the Almighty, and his ways past finding out.

During these calamities, God's dispensations have been very various, as well in reference unto towns and villages, as unto persons: As if some places had been by special providence marked out to preservation, as others unto destruction; of which no other reason can be rendered according unto man, than the good pleasure of God so to order and dispose of events, which sometimes, as Solomon says, are all one to the good, and to the clean and to the unclean.

And because special notice is taken of the town of Bridgewater, which although it is feared, as it were in the midst of danger, and hath been often assaulted by considerable numbers of the enemy, yet never lost any one of their inhabitants, young or old; a particular account shall here be given of the most remarkable passages of divine providence relating to that plantation since the war began. June 26th, 1675, when Philip's malice against the English, mixed with a particular prejudice against Governor Winslow, began to boil up to the height of an open rebellion; the people of Swanzy being like to be distressed by the Indians, a post was instantly sent to the Governor of Plimouth the way lying through Bridgewater: the said post returned the next day, and about 9 or 10 of the clock, as he passed through the town, left an order from the Governor for the raising of twenty men, well armed, and furnished with horses, to be forthwith dispatched away for the relief of Swanzy; seventeen were all that could be raised on the sudden, who were sent thither that night, and were the first that were upon their march in all the country; and possibly they fared not the worse for their forwardness: As Deborah the prophetess blessed God for them that offered themselves willingly among the people: These sevteen of Bridgewater, were June 21st, ordered by Capt. Bradford of Metapoiset, a place at twelve miles distance from Swanzy, to strengthen the garrison at one Bourn's house, wherein were seventy persons, amongst whom were only found sixteen men. After they had marched five miles of their way, having Mr. Brown's son for their pilot, they met with some Swanzy people, newly turned out of their houses (by which they were to pass) who having not as yet resisted unto blood, yet made doleful lamentations, wringing of their hands, and bewailing of their losses, very much also persuading Bridgewater men to turn back, because of the danger, but they having so clear a call, had also more courage than cowardly to desert the cause of God and his people, lest they should thereby betray the lives of so many of their friends into the enemy's hands; and so by the good hand of God towards them, came safe to Metapoiset that night.

The next day in the morning, a part of them went to guard Mr. Brown, their Pilot, back to his quarters; in their return they came suddenly upon a party of Indians, about thirty in all; they were within shot of one another, but the English having no commission to fight till they were assaulted, and not being impeded in their passage, they returned safe to their garrison at Metapoiset: The Indians presently drawing off, and firing three guns (though not with intent to do them any hurt, as was conceived) gave a shout, and so left them. When this party of the English drew near to their garrison, they met with a company of carts going to fetch corn from an house deserted near by, about a quarter of a mile off from Mr. Bourn's house, the soldiers gave them notice of the Indians which they discovered, and withal advised them by no means to venture any more, because of the danger; they were resolved notwithstanding these earnest persuasions of the soldiers to have another turn, which they soon found to be to the peril of their own lives, six of them being presently after killed right out, or mortally wounded, as soon as they came to the barn where was the corn; these six are said to be the first that were slain in this quarrel. The soldiers at the garrison hearing the guns, made what haste they could to the place, but being most of them in that interim gone to look after their horses, they could not come time enough to the relief of their friends, yet upon their approach, they who had done the mischief presently fled away: One Jones hard pursued by two Indians, was by their coming delivered from the extent of the enemy's cruelty, but having received his mortal wound, had only that favour thereby, to die in the arms of his friends, though by the wounds received from his enemies.

The next week fifteen of those soldiers looking after their horses, fell into an ambush of twenty of the Indians, but being prepared for the encounter, they discharged their guns upon each other; but our men received no hurt, some of them felt the wind of the bullets passing by their faces; what damage the enemy received is uncertain, yet some of the English report they found some of their enemies dead bodies in the place afterward.

Thus were they not only preserved in many perils themselves, but became instrumental also for the preservation of most of that garrison, who with their goods, by their means, with the help of a small party of Plymouth forces, sent thither after the six were killed (as is mentioned before) were soon after transported safely to Read Island.

Many outrages were that summer committed upon their neighbours at Taunton and Namasket, yet it pleased God to protect this poor town of Bridgewater from any other hurt, till the beginning of April following, when themselves, with their neighbours of Taunton and Rehoboth were strongly solicited to desert their dwellings, and repair down to the towns by the sea side, but God encouraged them to keep their stations, notwithstanding the extrem danger then presented. It is reported that Philip gave orders that Taunton and Bridgewater should not be destroyed till the last, which is all the favour to be expected from an enemy, but these things are only in the hands of God, and not to be determined by man.

April 9th, being Lord's day, a small party of the enemy came down upon the said Bridge-water, burnt an outhouse & barn, broke up & rifled several other houses in the same quarter of the town, which are notwithstanding yet remaining ; they sent out a party of their men to pursue them that night, and many days after, but could not hear of them.

May 7th, the Lord's day also (no doubt but the betterness of the day, will increase the badness of their deed, attempted thereon) they had intelligence of a great body of Indians dispersed that way, with intent to have fallen upon the town that very day, but were casually prevented by a great deal of rain that fell the night before ; however, they were resolved not to miss the opportunity, wherefore on the next day (May 8th) about three hundred of them, one Tisguogen being their chief leader, at 8 or 9 in the morning made an assault upon the east end of the town, on the south side of the river : Many of the inhabitants stayed at home that morning, because of the intelligence the day before, and so were the more ready to entertain them ; some that not taking that warning, ventured into the field about their occasions, were in danger of surprizal, but by the special favour of God escaped. and came time enough to help defend their own and their neighbours dwellings, being shot at, and hard pursued a considerable way.

The Indians presently began to fire the town but it pleased God so to spirit and encourage several of the inhabitants, issuing out of their garrison houses, that they fell upon them with great resolution, and beat them off; at the same instant of time, the Lord of Hosts also fighting for them from Heaven, by sending a storm of thunder and rain very seasonably which prevented the burning of the houses which were fired: The soldier also fighting under the banner of God's special protection, were so successful in repelling the enemy, that they neither had any of the inhabitants killed or taken, and but one wounded. The Indians by this stout resistance, being beaten off to the skirts of the town, made a fresh onset upon another quarter thereof, on the north side of the river, where they had done much more mischief, but that God stirred up sundry of the people to venture out of their fortified houses, who fired upon the enemy, and beat them from their dwellings, so as in the evening they drew off to an outhouse, three miles distant from the town: The next day the inhabitants expected another assault, but the enemy having burnt the house and barn where they kept their rendezvous over night, and one house more not far distant, they marched all clear away for that time.

Thus it pleased God so to order his dispensations toward this small town, as a brand plucked out of the fire, that they did but just taste of this bitter cup, which others drank deeper of ; yet had they not such mercy, as these had, mixed therewith : Under God, the courage of the inhabitants was a great means of their preservation, for they fired so stoutly upon the enemy, that they durst not come very near any of the garrisoned houses, saluting them only at a distance. God was eminently seen upholding the spirits of all sorts, men and women, so as no consternation of mind was seen upon any of them, during the whole time of the dispute.

In this assault they lost but thirteen dwelling houses, whereof five only were in the town (the rest being outhouses, and deserted for the present) with some few barns, and some of their cattle ; all which was a very inconsiderable loss, in comparison of what befel others, and themselves might have endured, if God had not by his special favour prevented.

July 14th and 15th, another party of Indians came down upon the north west side of the town, but with no better success ; for they had no commission from the Lord of Hosts to touch any of the persons of the inhabitants, their power reaching only to the slaying of their cattle at this time.

July 18th, 19th, and 20th, they sent our parties after the enemy to pursue them by their track, who fell upon some of them. On the 20th they took sixteen, whereof two were men : On this day they had to assist them, it seems, some of the bay Indians, sent them from Capt. Brattle ; some of the captives informed that there were but seventy or eighty in the company, and but ten or twelve men amongst them : But within a few days these Bridgewater men shall find better success in pursuit of their enemies, when Philip himself shall hardly escape their hands, as shall be seen afterwards.

While one party of the enemy thus acted their part and about Plimouth colony, towards the seacoasts, other parties of them were not idle in the Massachusetts colony, where they assaulted many places, doing what mischief they could by firing of houses, and killing several persons in the inland plantations.

March 2d, they assaulted Groton ; the next day over night Major Willard with, seventy horse came into the town ; forty foot also came up to their relief from Watertown, but the Indians were all fled, having first burnt all the houses in the town, save four that were garrisoned, the meeting house being the second house they fired ; soon after Capt. Sill was sent with a small party of dragoons, of eight files, to fetch off the inhabitants of Groton, and what was left from the spoil of the enemy, having under his conduct about sixty carts being in debth from front to rear above two miles, when a party of Indians lying in ambush, at a place of eminent advantage, fired upon the front and mortally wounded two of the first carriers, who both died the next night (had

God permitted) have done eminent damage to the whole body, it being a full hour before the whole body could be drawn up, which was done with care and courage : but the Indians after a few more shot made, without doing harm, retired, and made no further assault upon them, being the same party of Indians which the day before had burnt some part of Chelmsford. Soon after this village was deserted and destroyed by the enemy ; yet it was a special providence, that though the carts were guarded with so slender a convoy, yet there was not any considerable loss sustained.

The surprizal of Groton was after this manner ; On March 2d, the Indians came in the night and rifled eight or nine houses, and carried away some cattle, and alarmed the town.

On March 9th, about ten in the morning, a parcel of Indians (having two days lurked in the town, and taken possession of three out houses, and feasted themselves with corn, divers swine and poultry, which they there seized) laid an ambush for two carts, which went from their garrison to fetch in some hay, attended with four men, two of which espying the enemy, made a difficult escape, the other two were set upon, and one of them slain, stript naked, his body mangled, and dragged into the highway, and laid on his back in a most shameful manner : The other taken captive, and after sentenced to death ; but the enemy not concurring in the manner of it, execution was deferred, and he by the providence of God escaped by a bold attempt the night before he was designed to have been slaughtered, and fled to the garrison at Lancaster, the cattle in both towns wounded, and five of them slain.

March 13th was the day when the enemy came in a full body, by their own account four hundred, and thought by the inhabitants to be not many less. The town was at this time (having been put into a fright by the sad catastrophe of Lancaster, the next bordering town) gathered into five garrisons, four of which were so near together, as to be able to command from one to the other, between, which were the cattle belonging to those families, driven into pastures, which afterwards proved their preservation; the other was near a mile distant from the rest.

This morning the Indians (having in the night placed themselves in several parts of the town) made their onset; which began near the four garrisons; for a body of them having placed themselves in ambuscado, behind a hill near one of the garrisons two of them made discovery of themselves, as if they had stood upon discovery. At this time divers of the people, not suspecting any such matter (for the day before, many had been upon discovery many miles, and found no signs of an enemy being so near) were attending their occasions, some foddering their cattle, some milking their cows, of whom the enemy might easily have made a seizure; but God prevented; they having another design in hand, as soon after appeared: These two Indians were at length elpyed, and the alarm given; whereupon the most of the men in the next garrison, and some also in the second (which was about eight or nine pole distant) drew out and went to surprize those two Indians, who kept their station till our men reached the brow of the hill, then arose the ambush and discharged a volly upon them, which caused a disorderly retreat or rather a rout, in which one was slain, and three others wounded: Mean while another ambush had risen, and come upon the back side of the garrison so deserted of men, and pulled down the pallizadoes: The soldiery in this rout, retreated not to their own, but passed by to the next garrison, the women and children mean while exposed to hazard, but by the goodness of God made a safe escape to the other fortified house, without any harm, leaving their substance to the enemy, who made a prey of it, and spent the residue of the day in removing the corn and household stuff, in which loss five families were impoverished) and firing upon the other garrison: Here also they took some cattle. No sooner was the signal given by the first volley of shot, but immediately in several parts of the town at once, did the smোক arise, they firing the houses.

In the afternoon they used a stratagem not unlike the other, to have surprized the single garrison, but God prevented. An old Indian, if an Indian passed along the street with a black sheep on his back, with a slow pace, as one decrepid; they made several shot at him, at which several issued out to have taken him alive, but the watchman seasonably espying an ambush behind the house, gave the signal, whereby they were prevented.

The night following the enemy lodged in the town, some of them in the garrison they had surprized, but the body of them in an adjacent valley, where they made themselves merry after their savage manner. The next morning they gave two or three volleys at Capt. Parker's garrison, and so marched off, fearing as was thought, that supply might be nigh at hand. This assault of theirs was managed with their wonted subtlety and barbarous cruelty; for they stript the body of him whom they had slain in the first onset, and then cutting off his head, fixed it upon a pole, looking towards his own land. The corpse of the man slain the week before, they dug up out of his grave, they cut off his head and one leg, and set them upon poles, and stript off his winding sheet. An infant which they found dead, in the house first surprized, they cut in pieces, which afterward they cast to the swine. There were about forty dwelling houses burnt at that time, besides other buildings. This desolation was followed with the breaking up of the town, and scattering of the inhabitants, and removal of the candlestick after it had been there seated above twelve years.

Concerning the surprizing of Groton, March 13, there was not any thing much more material than what is already mentioned, save only the insolency of John Monoco, or one eyed John, the chief Captain of the Indians in that design; who having by a sudden surprizal early in the morning, seized upon a garrison house in one end of the town, continued in it, plundering what was there ready at hand, all that day; and at night did very familiarly in appearance, call out to Capt. Parker, that was lodged in another garrison house, and entertained a great deal of discourse with him, whom he called his old neighbour; dilating upon the cause of the war, and putting an end to it by a friendly peace; yet oft mixing bitter sarcasms, with several blasphemous scoffs and taunts, at their praying and worshipping God in the meeting house, which he deridingly said he had burnt. Among other things which he boastingly uttered that night, he said he burnt Medfield, (though it be not known whether he was there personally present or no) Lancaster, and that now he would burn that town of Groton, and the next time he would burn Chelmsford, Concord, Watertown, Cambridge, Charlestown, Roxbury, Boston, adding at last in their dialect, what we will, the

do : Not much unlike the proud Assyrian (if his power had been equal to his pride) sometimes threatened against Jerusalem, but was by the remarkable providence of God, so confounded within a few months after, that he was bereft of his four hundred and fourscore (of which he now boasted) and only with a few more braggadocio's like himself, Sagamore Sam old Jethro, and the Sagamore of Quabaog, were taken by the English, and was seen (not long before the writing of this) marching towards the gallows (through Boston streets, which he threatened to burn at his pleasure) with an halter about his neck, with which he was hanged at the town's end, September 26th, in this present year, 1676. So let thine enemies perish O Lord, and such contempt be poured on all them that open their mouths to blaspheme thy holy name.

Things looked with a disagreeable face about those parts, at this time, yet though the righteous fall seven times, let not their enemies rejoice, for the righteous shall rise again, but their wicked enemies shall fall into mischief, and rise no more. It was ebbing water with New England at this time, and a while after, but God shall turn the stream before it be long, and bring down their enemies to lick the dust before them.

After this, April 17th, Capt. Sill being appointed to keep garrison at Groton, some Indians coming to hunt for swine, three Indians drew near the garrison house, supposing it to have been deserted; were two of them slain by one single shot, made by the Captain's own hands, & the third, by another shot made from the garrison.

The danger which these inland towns were like to be exposed unto from the enemy, after they were driven out of the Narrhaganset country, was foreseen by the Council of the Massachusetts, yea they had some intimation thereof from the enemy themselves; but they were not well able to prevent it in that unreasonable time of the year; no way fit for marching of soldiers, and transporting of provisions (the winter then beginning to break up in this country) for while our forces were up in the Narrhaganset county in the winter, a couple of christian Indians were sent as spies into the Nipnet and Narrhaganset country; through the woods, in the depth of winter, when the ways were impassable for any other sort of people: These two, James and Job, ordered their business so prudently, as that they were admitted into those Indian habitations as friends, and had free liberty of discourse with them; they were at the first a little jealous of them, but by the means of one eyed John (a great Captain of the Indians, that afterwards led them that spoiled Groton, who having been a companion of one of the said spies, both in hunting, and in fighting against the Mohawks formerly; so esteemed of him, that he would not suffer any of the rest to touch him) they passed through all the Indian towns lying thirty miles distant from Quabaog, and twenty miles northward of the road to Connecticut. One of the said spies returned about January 24th, informing those that sent him what he had observed, both the number of the Indians (about three hundred in all) also their several towns, and what provision they had; plenty of venison, much pork from the Englishmen's hogs which they had taken; they confessed likewise that he and some of his party had killed the people at Nashaway, the last year, suspected to have been done by the Indians of Marlborough: He told them also they intended to burn Lancaster within three weeks after that time, which accordingly they did, much about the same time; adding moreover, that some Frenchmen were with them at Pocompluck, encouraging of them to go on with their designs, promising them assistance, which made some ready to think the Indians were stirred up by the French to do all this mischief, but more of this afterwards. What might be gathered from the foresaid premises is easy to conceive; whereupon new forces with as much speed as the season would allow, were raised and sent up into those parts, under the command of Major Savage in chief: They were dispatched away the beginning of March, and appointed to meet with such as should be sent from Connecticut colony, which they did about Quabaog, and so intended to march directly up to those Indian towns about Watchuset Hill, to the northwest; but the Indians were gone, and our forces in the pursuit of them taking the wrong path, missed of them, yet ranging through those woods, they were at one time suddenly assaulted by a small party of Indians firing upon them, wounding Mr. Cersthom Bulkly, by a shot in his thigh, and killing one of their soldiers; after which as they marched along, they accidentally fell upon another small party of the enemy, of whom they slew some, and took others to the number of sixteen, yet could not meet with the main body of the enemy, who it seems had passed over a great river by rafts, so our men could follow them no further, wherefore turning down towards Hadley and Northampton, whither it was supposed the Indians intended to pass, they came very seasonably to the relief of the said towns, which else had been in danger of being lost. For,

March 14th, the enemy fell upon Northampton, and in three places broke through the fortification of pallizadoes, set up round about the town a little before for their better security; but the town being at that time full of soldiers, they were quickly repulsed, after they had killed four men and two women, and fired four or five dwelling houses, and as many barns, with the loss of many of their lives, as was supposed.

While our forces under Major Savage continued on that side of the country a sad accident fell out at Springfield, the certainty of which it is judged meet here to relate to prevent mistakes; the matter having through a great oversight been otherwise represented than indeed it was, not only to the prejudice of truth, but to the disadvantage of some persons concerned therein. While the soldiers were quartered amongst the several towns upon Connecticut river, a party of the troop were quartered at a place belonging to Springfield, called the Long Meadow, three miles from the town below, toward Windsor; several of the inhabitants having most of the winter kept from the public meeting on the Lord's days for fear of the enemy, were encouraged to adventure to the assembly, on the 26th of March, riding in the company of the troopers; but having heard of no Indians thereabouts a good while, were more secure than they had cause; for riding some of them with women behind them, and some with their children in their arms, yet not so careful as to keep in the middle, but rather in the rear, and at some distance stragling from the rest of the company, a party of Indians lying in the bushes, as they rode along, fired upon the hindmost, and killed two, and wounded others: Those in the front having also women and males behind some of them, were at a stand to know what to do, fearing they might expose those women they had in their company, if they should ride back (in that winding road making through a woody place for near a mile or two together) to look after them that were behind; at the last, one that came riding up, told the foremost company there was no hurt, and that they were all coming; They that were before, rode away with all speed to the end of the town, where setting down the woman, the troopers returned back, but too late to recover too poor women, and two children, who upon the first assault were thrown off their horses, and immediately hauled into the bushes, and through a swamp on the other side of a steep bank, so as they could not be heard of all that afternoon, nor the next day till toward night, although they were diligently searched after by all the troopers in and about the town; at last when they were discovered just by a swamp side, the cruel wretches endeavoured to have killed them all, but in haste only wounded them with their hatchets, yet so as one of the poor creatures recovered; the other, with the children, died of their wounds before they were brought home, or within a little time after. They did not complain of any incivility toward them while they were in their power; but by the farewell given them at their parting, they found it true by their own experience, that the tender mercies of the wicked are cruelty.

There happened no other matter of moment worthy the reporting while our forces tarried in those parts, and the commanders observing that the enemy was turned back again through the woods, towards the Massachusetts Bay, after a month's time retired back, yet could never meet with the enemy in their return through the woods, although while they were at the towns aforesaid, they understood of several attempts made upon Sudbury and Marlborough, the most part of which last they destroyed March 26th, which made the inhabitants forsake their dwellings, leaving only a few houses garrisoned with foldiers, the better to secure a passage to the towns westward upon Connecticut river.

The inhabitants of Sudbury, with the soldiers under Lieut. Jacobs, of Marlborough, sufficiently alarmed by the late mischief done about those towns, resolved to try what work they could make with the enemy in the night; whereupon going forth, March 27th, toward morning, they discerned where the enemy lay by their fires, (near three hundred of them) and that within half a mile of a garrison house, near the place where they had done so much mischief the day before. Such was the courage and resolution of the English, though but forty in number, townsmen and soldiers, that they adventured to discharge upon them as they lay by their fires, when it was so dark that an Indian could hardly be discerned from a better man; yet God so directing, they discharged several times upon them, wounded thirty, fourteen of whom either died of their wounds the same day, or soon after, which had been chief agents in this present mischief against the English. Such was the success of this skirmish that the assailants came off without the loss of a man.

After this time the enemy began to scatter about in small parties, doing what mischief they could, about the Massachusetts, killing a man at Weymouth, another at Hingham, as they lay skulking up and down in swamps and holes, to assault any that occasionally looked never so little into the woods; sometimes alarming the towns about Boston, by discharging guns upon particular persons at Billerica, Braintree, and at Wrentham, near to which place, in the road to Rehoboth, they assaulted one Woodcock's house killed one man, and one of his sons, wounded another, and burnt his son's house.

Notwithstanding the little success of former attempts, Philip and his men have one prize more to play in the Massachusetts colony, before they go off the stage, and then we shall soon see their power visibly declining every where, until their final overthrow come upon them. There were several small parties of them scattered up and down all over the country, yet the main body of them was still lurking up and down in those woods that lye between Brookfield, Marlborough, and Connecticut river. Possibly they had some hopes of driving all the country before them to the towns upon the sea coast; for having burnt the deserted houses at Marlborough April 17th; the next day they set upon Sudbury with all their might (hoping tis like) to do there as they had done at the towns next beyond it. They did at the first prevail so far as to consume several houses and barns, and kill several persons, ten or twelve, of the English, that came from Concord to assist their neighbours at Sudbury, a town distant five miles from them, at the first hearing of the alarm, who unawares were surprized near a garrison, in hopes of getting some advantage upon a small party of the enemy that presented themselves in a meadow; a great number of Indians that lay unseen in the bushes, suddenly rose up, and intercepting the passage to the garrison house, killed and took them all.

But our sorrows and losses that day are not yet come to their height; for in the same day, that resolute stout hearted soldier, Capt. Wadsworth (who not long before, with not above forty men, rescued Lancaster, when it was in danger to have been all lost at once) being sent from Boston with fifty soldiers to relieve Marlborough, having marched twenty five miles and then understanding the enemy was gone through the woods toward Sudbury: This unwearied company, before ever they had taken any considerable rest, marched immediately back toward Sudbury (that lies ten miles nearer Boston) and being come within a mile of the town, they espyed a party of Indians not far from them; about an hundred, not more, as they conceived; these they might easily deal with; who retiring back a while, drew Capt. Wadsworth and his company above a mile into the woods, when on a sudden a great body of the enemy appeared; about five hundred as was thought, who compassing them around, forced them to the top of an hill, where they made very stout resistance a considerable while; but the night drawing on, and some of the company beginning to scatter from the rest, their fellows were forced to follow them, so as the enemy taking the chace, pursued them on every side, as they made too hasty a retreat, by which accident, being so much overpowered by the enemy's numbers, they were most of them lost. The Captain himself, with one Capt. Brocklebank (a choice spirited man, much lamented by the town of Rowley to which he belonged) and some others that fell into his company as he marched along, scarce twenty escapeing in all; so as another Captain and his fifty men perished at that time, as brave soldiers as any ever employed in the present service.

Thus as in former attempts of like nature too much courage and eagerness in pursuit of the enemy, hath added another fatal blow to this poor country.

The same day another party of the English coming from Brookfield whither they were sent as a convoy with provision for the garrison, were in danger likewise of falling in the hands of the same Indians, yet riding upon a good speed, and keeping their guns always ready presented against them they met, they never durst fire at them; only three or four having unadvisedly first discharged their guns against the enemy, and falling too much in the rear of their company, were cut off and lost. It is reported by some that afterwards escaped, how they cruelly tortured five or six of the English that night: Yet whatever their success was this day, it was observed by some (at that time their prisoners, and since released) that they seemed very passive after they came to their quarters, shewing no such signs of rejoicing as they usually were wont to do in like cases; whether for the loss of some of their own company in that day's encounter (said to be an hundred and twenty) or whether it were the Devil in whom they trusted that deceived them, and to whom they made their address the day before, by sundry conjurations of their powawes? Or whether it were by any dread that the Almighty sent upon their spirit upon their execrable blasphemies, which tis said they used in the torturing of some of their poor captives (bidding Jesus come and deliver them out of their hands from death, if he could) we leave as uncertain though some have so reported, yet sure it is that after this day they never prospered in any attempt they made against the English, but were continually scattered and broken, till they were in a manner all consumed. After this time, however they had braved it before, they seemed to apprehend that it was scarce feasible for them to withstand the power of the English, and therefore seemed more inclinable to a peace by several overtures made by them, if they knew how to have brought it about. For during these encounters they were willing to admit of some kind of treaty with the English, about the releasing of sundry of their captives, which they took at Lancaster in February last, and elsewhere: To this end sundry attempts were made by help of several of the praying Indians (as they were called) about the redemption of some of the women and children, which were at that time in their possession; and by degrees something was effected that way; possibly their own present sufferings, and wants that were upon them, might induce them thereunto: For by this time the spring of the year came on, their provision was all spent, and they forced to live wholly upon ground nuts, and upon the flesh of the English creatures, both horse and neat cattle, which they daily plundered. The ground nuts running up to seed in the summer, begin to grow so sticky, as they were scarce eatable; the flesh also of the English cattle proving unwholesome for their bodies, filling them with sundry diseases: One of them having eaten much horse flesh, complained that he had before eaten horse and now horse began to eat him, meaning some deadly disease growing upon his eating such rank flesh, unwholesome for their bodies, especially without salt, as their usual manner is. The fishing season also began to come in, wherein they use to take abundance of all sorts, with which those great rivers up the country are abundantly stored; they used to take thereof, and drying it in the smoke, make provision thereof for the greatest part of the year; and if the war continued, they could not but see they should utterly be cut off therefrom; and that if the planting season also were lost, they should be in great want of summer fruits, sc. beans and squashes (besides their corn) with which they were wont to live all the latter part of the summer. Upon all considerations they seemed pretty inclinable to hearken to a peace, though some were apt to think they would never have kept it further than would stand with their own advantage, and that their present desire thereof was only to gain time.

A Person formerly acquainted with the Indians about Lancaster, did adventure upon the forementioned overtures, to go amongst them to try if he could not prevail with them for the redemption of the minister's wife, taken captive in February last, from Lancaster and through the favour of him who having the hearts of all in his hand, inclines them as he pleases, obtained the desired end upon an inconsiderable sum, which gave encouragement to the council to send two messengers on the like errand the same week, to procure the redemption of others, not without success: The former, viz. Mrs. Rowlandson being brought to Boston upon the election day, May 3d, it was generally looked at as a smile of providence, and doubtless was a return of prayer, and answer of faith, with which her husband had been upheld, and supported from the day of her captivity; his two children also were returned back not long after, more by the overruling hand of God (that turns the captivity of his people as the streams of the south; and sometimes inclining them to pity his servants, that are of themselves more cruel than the sea monsters) than by any other contrivance of man's policy.

And yet notwithstanding motions of this nature about the redemption of some of our prisoners still in their hands, there was no cessation of arms between us.

About this time letters were sent down from Connecticut colony, informing the general court then assembled at Boston, that some of the Mohawks (a sort of fierce and savage Indians yet mortal enemies to these we were at war with) had fallen upon some of Philip's party, and destroyed many of them: Likewise that many of them were destroyed by fevers and fluxes, with other distempers falling amongst them, which was some reviving to our hopes, that the foot of our enemy should slide in due time, and that destruction was hastening upon them, though still they were permitted to do mischief in sundry particular places of the country, which must be minded as we pass along.

Those Indians that were our professed enemies, after they had been beaten out of the Narrhaganset country, February 1st, tarried a while at Winimazeag, a place two day's journey north of Quabaog, where they divided themselves into two companies, one of them tarried on that side the country, the other made toward Plimouth colony, taking Medfield in their way, from whence as they marched along they met with a notable repulse at Boggiston, a small hamlet, or company of farms not far from the said Medfield, where they attempted a garrison, but meeting with stout resistance, they left the enterprize, and kept on their way toward Plimouth colony, where they scattered themselves up and down, waiting for opportunities to spoil and destroy the English plantations on that side of the country.

Besides what is already mentioned on May 11th, a party of them assaulted the town of Plimouth, burnt eleven houses, and five barns belonging thereunto: On the other side, a small party of the English scouting about in pursuit of the Indians, fell upon a party of them that lay waiting in ambush, but being discerned by an indian in the company of our men that gave timely notice, our soldiers had an opportunity thereby to make the first shot, and thereby not only prevented a mischief to themselves, but killed also some of the enemy (one of whom was observed to be of more note than his fellows, by his attire) the rest fled away from them that pursued, though but a small company; so that there were daily reciprocal acts of hostility in those parts.

Within a few days after this, seven houses and two barns more were burnt by the enemy in and about Plimouth; who did the like mischief about the same time to the remaining houses of Namasket or Middleborough.

About this time another sort of Indians that belonged to Wamesit, a place near Chelmsford bordering upon Merrimack (who had been provoked by the rash, unadvised, cruel acts of some of the English, about October 27th, and November 4th, had fired upon them several guns, both at Chelmsford and Woburn, to the killing of some, and wounding of others, upon suspicion that the said Indians were guilty of burning a barn, and haystack not far off) suddenly turned our enemies, after the winter was over; having first withdrawn themselves from the place assigned them, and where they had been relieved all the winter (one of them after a former revolt) and took their opportunity to fire Mr. Falconer's house in Andover town, early that spring, and wounded one Ro.

ger Marks, and killed his horse. Two more houses about Shawskin, beyond the said Andover, were burnt about March 10th : Also they killed a young man of the said town, April 8th, the son of George Abbot ; and another son of his also was carried away the same day, who notwithstanding was returned some few months after, almost pined to death with hunger.

At the same time they killed some of their cattle, cutting out only the tongues of some of them for haste, being shot at by several of the inhabitants from their garrisons.

March 10th, at Concord two men going for hay one of them was killed. At Chelmsford, the said Wamesit Indians, about March 18th before, fell upon some houses on the north side of the river; burnt down three or four that belonged to the family of Edward Colburn : The said Colburn, with Samuel Varnham, his neighbour, being pursued, as they passed over the river to look after their cattle on that side of the river ; and making several shots against them, who returned the like again upon the said Indians, (judged to be about forty) what success they had upon the enemy, was best known to themselves ; but two of Varnham's sons were slain by the enemy, shot before they could recover the other side of the river. April 15th, also, were fourteen or fifteen houses burnt there.

Not long before this February 1st, 1676, Thomas James that kept a farm at Sudbury, whose dwelling was three or four miles out of town, had his house assaulted and fired, his wife killed, and his children carried captive among the Indians.

Also two men were killed at a farm about Concord, Isaac and Jacob about the middle of February, and a young maid that was set to watch upon a hill, of about fifteen years of age, was carried captive, who strangely escaped away upon an horse that the Indians had taken from Lancaster a little before. In the like strange manner did one of Eames's children escape away about May 3d last, travelling thirty miles alone in the woods, without any relief till he came to an English town. Eames's house was assaulted when he was from home, by an Indian called Netus (not long after slain at Marlborough) which had been very familiar with the English, with nine or ten more of his company, as perfidious and barbarous as himself. They burned all the dwellings that belonged to the farm, corn hay and cattle, besides the dwelling house with what was therein; it is probable those at Concord were killed by the same hands about a fortnight after.

Many such like remarkable instances of special providences might be mentioned, if it were convenient to insert such particular passages into the general narrative of the late troubles with our barbarous enemies.

On May 3d a party of them killed a man at Haverhill, upon the edge of Merrimack River, and passing over the said River to Bradford, spoiled another family, killing one Thomas Kimball, and carrying his wife and five children captive, forty miles up in the woods; although it was questioned whether this last mischief was done by any of Philip's party, but rather by some that belonged to the eastward Indians, of which there may be occasion, God willing, to speak more of afterward.

For the suppressing of these insolencies several companies of fresh soldiers both horse and foot were raised in the Massachusetts by the governor and council of that colony, and sent out to suppress the common enemy; the foot under the command of the Captains Still, Cutler and Holbrook; the horse under the command of the Captains Brattle, Prentice and Henshman, the last of which was commander in chief. These several companies modelled as aforesaid, were sent out April 27th, 1676, to range the woods towards Hassanamesit.

The 6th of May they met with a considerable party of the enemy; they were first discovered by the Natick scouts pursuing a bear, and at the first not discerned that the Natick Indian scouts belonged to our men, it gave some advantage to our forces; our horsemen falling upon them before they were aware, killed and took of the enemy about 16, which they took no notice of at the present, although it was confessed by themselves that they lost twenty in that encounter. It was reported that the sounding of a trumpet without order did much hurt, but the commander in chief affirmeth that it was no disadvantage to the service in hand, it neither being heard by our own foot, nor yet by the enemy. If any error was committed by the English companies, it was that the horse did not timely enough draw down from the top of the hill, whereby they came to be discovered by the enemy, who thereupon made the more haste to escape; however, it was no small loss to the enemy, some of the slain being known to be considerable persons; and it struck such a terror into them that they never durst face our men afterwards; for although after our men returned to their quarters at Medfield, they saw two hundred fires in the night; yet they could never come near them again to fight any company of them; but the season proving rainy hindred any further pursuit of them at that time. And soon after this the soldiers being visited with sickly distempers by reason of an epidemical cold at that time prevailing through the country, they were for the present released for the recovery of their health, with intent to be called together again at a more convenient time; this was done the 10th of May.

During this interval of time, upon a report that a party of the enemy that were discovered about Rehoboth, busy in fishing in a river thereabouts. Captain Brattle was sent up about the 23d of May, who with the help of some of the inhabitants, killed 11 or 12 of them, without the loss of but one of our men. Had they not discovered some of our's on the opposite shore, it was conceived a greater spoil might have been made amongst them.

But in the next place we must take notice of the proceedings of the enemy about Connecticut. The greatest body of them made towards Flimouth colony early in the spring, as was said before, where we shall leave them for the present, and observe what the remaining part of them did westward.

Some scattering parties were skulking about Springfield and those lower towns, upon a small number of whom Capt. Holyoke (newly chosen Captain of Springfield in the room of his father lately deceased) handselled his office early in the spring; for having notice of some of them in those woods, he marched after them with ten or twelve resolute young men, and waiting his opportunity, surprized them near the great river so as two or three of them were left dead upon the place, another mortally wounded got on an island in the river, where it was concluded he took his last night's lodging. The other being sorely wounded was taken alive and brought home to Springfield, where he confessed many things to one of the inhabitants that understood their language, owning the truth in many things against his own company, and soon after died of his wounds.

This was but a preparative to an higher piece of service which Capt. Holyoke was soon after engaged in, and wherein he acquitted himself beyond expectation, and taking more pains than ordinary in making his retreat, he got a surfeit, which ended his days the September following, near Boston.

About the beginning of April likewise, some of the inhabitants about Hadley, attending their tillage at Hockanum, within three miles of the town, and having a guard of soldiers with them, yet three of the company were casually slain by a party of the enemy that lay in wait for such an opportunity. One of them was Mr. Goodman, a deacon of the church, that went a little beyond the command of the soldiers that came to guard them, to view the fence of his own land, and two others, that contrary to express orders would venture upon the top of an high hill near by to take a needless and unseasonable view of the country, were shot down by the enemy before they could recover their corps du guard.

But the great company of the enemy that stayed on that side of the country, and about Watchet hills, when the rest went towards Plimouth though they had been disappointed in their planting by the death of Canonchet, were loth to lose the advantage of the fishing season then coming in ; wherefore, having feared themselves near the upper falls of Connecticut river, not far from Deerfield and perceiving that the English forces were now drawn off from the lower towns of Hadley and Northampton, now and then took advantages to plunder them of their cattle, and not fearing any assault from our soldiers, grew a little secure, while they were upon their fishing design, insomuch that a couple of English lads lately taken captive by the enemy, and making their escape, acquainted their friends at home how secure they lay in those places, which so animated the inhabitants of Hadley, Hatfield and Northampton. that they being willing to be revenged for the loss of their cattle, besides other preceeding mischiefs took up a resolution with what strength they could raise among themselves (partly out of garrison soldiers, and partly of the inhabitants) to make an assault upon them, which if it had been done with a little more deliberation; waiting for the coming of supplies, expected from Hartford, might have proved a fatal business to all the said Indians: yet was the victory obtained more considerable than at first was apprehended; for not having much above an hundred and fifty fighting men in their company, they marched above twenty miles silently in the dead of the night, May 18th and came upon the said Indians a little before break of day, whom they found almost in a dead sleep, without any scouts abroad, or watching about their wigwarms at home ; for in the evening they had made themselves merry with new milk and roast beef, having lately driven away many of their milch cows, as an English woman confessed, that was made to milk them.

When they came near the Indians rendezvous, they alighted off their horses, and tied them to some young trees at a quarter of a miles distance, so marching up, they fired briskly into their wigwarms, killing many upon the place, and frightening others with the sudden alarm of their guns, and made them run into the river, where the swiftness of the stream carrying them down a steep fall, they perished in the waters, some getting into canoes (small boats made of the barks of birchen trees) which proved to them a Charon's boat, being sunk, or overset by the shooting of our men, delivered them into the like danger of the waters giving them thereby a passport into the other world ; Others of them creeping for shelter under the banks of the great river, were espyed by our men and killed with their swords ; Capt. Holyoke killing five, young and old, with his own hands, from under a bank. When the Indians were first awakened with the thunder of their guns, they cried out Mohawkes, Mohawkes, as if their own native enemies had been upon them : but the dawning of the light soon notified their error, though it could not prevent the danger.

Such as came back spake sparingly of the number slain; some say they could not in reason be less than two or three hundred of them that must necessarily perish in the midst of so many instruments of destruction managed against them with such disadvantages to themselves. Some of their prisoners afterwards owned that they lost above 300 in that camifado, some whereof were principal men Sachems, and some of their best fighting men that were left, which made the victory more considerable than else it would have been; nor did they seem ever to have recovered themselves after this defeat, but their ruin immediately followed upon it.* Yet such was the awful hand of Providence in the close of this victory, mixing much bitter with the sweet that it might well be called a costly victory to the conquerors, that so no flesh should glory in itself.

The Indians that lay scattering on both sides of the river, after they recovered themselves and discovered the small number of them that assailed them, turned head upon the English, who in their retreat were a little disordered for want of the help of the eldest Captain that was so enfeebled by sickness before he set out, that he was no way able for want of bodily strength (not any way defective for want of skill or courage to assist or direct in making the retreat : For some of the enemy fell upon the guards that kept the horses, others pursued them in the rear, so as our men sustained very much damage as they retired, missing after their returns thirty eight of their men ; and if Capt. Holyoke had not played the man at a more than ordinary rate, sometimes in the front, sometimes in the flank and rear, at a fatal business to the assailants. The said Capt. Holyoke's horse was shot down under him, and himself ready to be assaulted by many of the indians, just coming upon him, but discharging his Pistols upon one or two of them, whom he presently dispatched, and a friend coming up to his rescue, he was saved, and so carried off the soldiers without any further loss. It is confidently reported by some that were there present at this engagement, that one told above an hundred Indians lye dead upon the place ; and another affirmed that he told near an hundred and forty swimming down the falls, none of which were observed to get alive to the shore save one. The loss that beset our men in the retreat was occasioned principally by the bodily weakness of Capt. Turner, unable to manage his charge any longer, yet some say they wanted powder, which forced them to retire as fast as they could by Capt. Turner's order. It is also said by one present at the fight, that seven or eight in the rear of the English, through haste, missed their way, it being a cloudy dark morning, and were never heard of again ; and without doubt fell into the Indians hands, and it is feared some of them were tortured. About seven days after this they had a mind to try the chance of war again, and see if they could not recover their loss by returning the like upon the English : For,

* There was but one of our men killed in the engagement: their loss following was owing to the report of a captive taken, who said Philip was near with 1000 men: word was then given for every man to shift for himself; a panic seized the men, who instantly fled in confusion.

May 30th, a great number of them (supposed to be six or seven hundred) appeared before Hatfield, fired about 12 houses and barns without the fortification of the town ; a number of houses in the centre of the town were surrounded with palisadoes ; these were attacked in the day time, when the men were all out in the fields, except one aged man ; they drove away multitudes of their cattle and sheep, spreading themselves in the meadow near the town ; which bravado so raised the courage of their neighbours at Hadley that twenty-five resolute young men ventured over the river to relieve Hatfield in this distress, who charged the enemy with such undaunted courage and resolution (Audaces fortuna juvat) that they beat down five or six at the first shot they made ; so making way through the thickest of their enemies, that lay ready to take aim at them behind every tree as they passed by ; yet they escaped all their shot till they came within a little of the town they came to relieve, where they lost five of their number.

The enemy being amazed at the resolution of our men, being but so small a handful, that they fled immediately from the town; having lost twenty five of their men in the enterprize. The council of the Massachusetts gathering by these proceedings of the Indians, that their desire of peace was only to gain time, ordered that the forces raised before April 27th, and for a time released, should be hastened out again to range the woods towards Hadley, and those parts; made an agreement with Hartford colony to send forces from thence to meet them about Brookfield, and so to scour along on both sides Connecticut, to distress the enemy what they could, and keep them from fishing in those waters, their hope of planting being now almost over. To this end, about May 30th, 1676, the forces under Capt. Henshman were called together again, and sent to Brookfield, to meet with those expected from Hartford colony; in the way, our's by the direction of Tom Doublet (a Natic Indian, who was a little before employed in the redemption of captives) following tracks of Indians, came upon a party of the enemy fishing in Weshacom ponds, toward Lancaster, of whom they killed seven, and took twenty nine, mostly women and children; yet belonging to considerable persons, it made the success the more to be valued. Our forces being by this means retarded, could not meet with those of Connecticut at Brookfield, but followed them the week after; having first returned from Weshatom to Marlborough, to supply themselves with ammunition, and so marched directly towards Hadley, where they met with Connecticut forces; and from thence according to mutual agreement, our's marched on the east side of the river, and Connecticut forces to the west, up toward Squakeag (now Northfield) coming to Deerfield, and the great falls thereabouts, they sent up their scouts, but not hearing of the enemy, they marched up no higher, being in no good capacity to have gone further if there had been occasion, by reason of a tedious storm of rain which occasioned much damage in their ammunition and provision. While our forces lay about Deerfield, some of our soldiers ranging, lighted upon the body of Capt. Turner, about Green's river, in passing of which stream he was supposed to have received his mortal wounds.

While our forces continued thereabouts, they did the enemy some little spoil, in seizing much of their fish and goods stolen from the English, and hid in their barns under ground; conjecturing also that they found four or five places where some of the English had been tortured to death by cruel burning, after they had been fastened between stakes set in the ground; but not meeting with any of the enemy, they all returned home, conceiving that having been forced from their quarters in those parts, they were drawn down lower towards the English plantations eastward, viz. Plymouth and the Massachusetts. What success Capt. Henshaw's forces had in their retiring homeward, and what they observed of the motion of the Indians, may be seen in a letter of his dated June 30th: "Our scouts brought intelligence that all the Indians were in a continual motion, some toward Narrhaganset, others toward Watchuset, shifting gradually, and taking up each others quarters, and lay not above a night in a place. The twenty seven scouts brought in two squaws, a boy, and a girl, giving account of five slain. Yesterday they brought in an old fellow brother to a Sachem, six squaws and children having killed five men, and wounded others, if not killed them, as they supposed by the blood found in the way, and an hat shot through. These and the other inform that Philip and the Narrhagansets were gone several days before to their own places, Philip's purpose being to do what mischief he could to the English. By advice I drew out a commanded party under the conduct of Capt. Sill, viz. sixteen files of English, all my troops, and the Indians, excepting one file, being all we could make provision for, for what with the falling short of the bread promised us, and a great deal of that we had proving mouldy, the rest of the forces had but one biscuit a man to bring them to this place : This party was ordered towards Watchuset, and so Nashaway and the Washakem ponds, where we have notice Indians were, and so to return unto this place ; whereby your Honors letter that came to me yesterday morning, I understood that provision was ordered for us and which we found to our great relief, which we met with last night coming hither weary and hungry. The commanded party we left at Quonfiquomon where they intended to stay a while for the last scouts we sent out : Eleven prisoners we had in all, two of the eldest by council we put to death, the other nine the Commissary is ordered to convey to Boston, with the baggage, horses, and some of their attendants not fit for the service.

It plainly appears by the contents of the said letter, as well as by many other testimonies that about this time the Indians, our enemies, who hitherto had been linked together as brethren in iniquity and cruelty were now strangely divided and separated the one from the other ; some impute it to an assault made upon them by the Mohawkes, who falling upon Philip with the inland Indians, slew about 50 of them ; whereupon those of Philip's company resolved to return to their own country, and do what mischief they could to the English thereabouts this was reported by an Indian brought to Seaconk, June 29, 1676, taken at Providence.

Others are ready to think that it was upon some quarrel amongst themselves occasioned by an evil spirit sent from God upon them that thereby they might, being scattered, the more easily be taken and ruined by the English, now that the time of vengeance was come when they shall be called to an account for all their former outrages and cruelties; for now is the snare hastening upon them where in they shall be hampered in their own devices so to be taken and destroyed. It cannot but be acknowledged as a very remarkable providence, that Capt. Henschman in his late expedition to Hadley, killed and took about 84 of the enemy, without the loss of any one of his own men; the like favorable success happened to Major Talcot in his passage from Norwich to Quabaog, as was said before, and soon after his return.

But by that time our forces were returned home as far as Sudbury; they were ordered upon the solicitation of the Governor of Plimouth, two companies of them at least, to march away immediately to Dedham, and so to Seaconk or Rehoboth, to join Major Bradford in the pursuit of Philip, who was it seems with many hundreds of his barbarous followers fallen upon the English plantations thereabouts, and whither also a little before, Capt. Brattle with a troop of horse, and Capt. Mosely with a company of foot, were sent up from Boston to pursue after them, now flocking in great numbers to those woods. There was at this time no small hopes of surprizing Philip ; several reports being brought that he was seen in this and that place, not having above 20 or thirty men attending on him ; but his time was not yet fully come, nor had he as yet fully accomplished all that mischief he was like to be suffered to do : For on the 1st of July, 1676, a party of his Indians committed a horrid and barbarous murder upon Mr. Hezekiah Willet, of Swanzey, an hopeful young gentleman as any in those parts. They used frequently to keep a sentinel on the top of their house from a watch house built thereon, whence they could discover any Indians before they came near the house, but not hearing of the enemy in those parts for a considerable time, that necessary piece of circumspection was omitted that day, whereby that deserving person was betrayed into their cruel hands ; for within a quarter of an hour after he went out of his own door, within sight of his house, he was shot at by three of them at once, from every one of whom he received a mortal wound ; they after their barbarous manner took off his head, and carried it away with them (which however was soon after recovered) leaving the trunk of his body behind, as a sad monument of their inhuman cruelty. The same Indians, not being above 30 in number, took away a negro belonging to the same family, who being faithful to his master's and the country's interest, ventured his life to make his escape, which was the preservation of many others; for the said negro being a little acquainted with their language, discovered to the English after his escape, Philip's purpose to seize such and such places: In the first place to assault Taunton, which in all probability had been in great danger, if their treacherous plots and purposes had not so wonderfully been made known beforehand. The said negro affirmed, that there was near a thousand of them; for he observed that although they had killed 20 head of neat cattle over night, yet there was not any part of them left the next day at eight o'clock in the morning. By this special providence the enemy was defeated of their purpose, and never after had an opportunity of doing any considerable damage to the English in that part of the country. So, after this day, we may truly date the time of our deliverance, and beginning of revenges upon the enemy; now is their own turn come, when it shall be done unto them as they have done unto us; they that before led others into captivity, must henceforth go into captivity themselves; and they that killed with the sword, must themselves be killed with the sword, as in the sequel of this narrative will abundantly be manifest: the history of which before we shall any further pursue, we must a little while wait upon our friends (those forces sent from Connecticut) in their return back into their own colony, before it be done, some things should be premised concerning the occasion of their coming, and the successes that did attend them in their march thither.

Our friends and brethren of that colony, although they had never actually felt half of those miseries that beset the people of the other two, yet never denied their assistance to the suppressing of the common enemy, yea, sometimes they did afford it, before it was expressly desired, according to the tenor of the articles of confederation and rules of common prudence; considering that if the fire of this war was not timely extinguished it would endanger their own fabrick; therefore according to agreement, the council of that colony ordered their successful commander, Major Talcot, to meet our forces at Quabaog, or Brookfield, in order to the pursuing of the enemy in those parts. In the way as they were marching from Norwich thither, divine Providence so far smiled upon the enterprize, as to give them an opportunity to surprize 51 of the enemy, of whom 19 were slain, without the loss of any one of their own company, which could not but much enhance the price of the victory to the conquerors.

The like succels had their friends which they left behind (the volunteers gathered out of three towns by the sea side, New London, Stonington and Norwich) and who were some of them released by Major Talcot, when he first began his march, that they might better in the absence of the army guard their own towns; for before the return of the forces under Maj. Talcot to that side of the country, they had made two expeditions against their enemies, the Narrhagansets, that were skulking up and down on that side of the country, in one of which they killed and took a bove 30, the most of which being men, are said to have been slain by them. In the other 45, the most of which probably were women and children but being all young serpents of the same brood, the subduing or taking so many, ought to be acknowledged as another signal victory and pledge of divine favor to the English. But to return, It was not without the special direction of Providence that those Hartford forces were sent to those western towns a week before those of the Massachusetts could get thither; for otherwise one or more of those towns might have been lost; seeing that on the 12th of June, soon after if not the next day after they arrived there, the enemy, as if resolved to try the utmost of their power, violently assaulted the town of Hadley, with a body of about 700 men, at five or six o'clock in the morning, laying an ambush at one end of the town, while the greater part of them were alarming the other; but the Connecticut forces being at that time quartered in the towns thereabouts, (who were English, and friendly Indians. Pequods and Mohegins, about 500 in all) that were ready at hand, besides those that had been quartered there ever since March, who had been left by Major Savage when he left those parts under the command and charge of Capt. Turner, slain at the great falls, as is noted before, but since commanded by Capt. Swain. These by their joint and ready assistance, wherein the fence of palisadoes surrounding the town was no little advantage, gave the Indians such a smart repulse, that they found the place too hot for them to abide it; for the soldiers or townsmen within firing a piece of ordnance, so affrighted the savages, or a party of them against whom it was discharged, that although they had just before surprized and possessed an house at the north part of the town yet they instantly fled leaving some of their dead upon the place; nor did they any considerable mischief with all their numbers, save firing a barn about that end of the town, and killing two or three of the soldiers, or two daring inhabitants, who would against express order, venture to go without the fortification.

It was accounted by some that were present near the time of that assault, a great oversight that having so fair an opportunity to chase the enemy upon so considerable advantage, it was let slip, and not improved, for Connecticut soldiers being all, or most of them furnished with horses, they might have been soon overtaken, and many of them destroyed, but God hid it from their eyes. The commander, in chief; it is said, quartered at one end of the town, (Hatfield was then within the limits of Hadley) on the west side of the river, and did not apprehend the advantage till the season was over; nor was any such thing as an assault expected from the enemy so early in the morning; it being a general observation heretofore, that they seldom or ever used to make any attempts in the night; part of which could not but be improved in way of preparation for such a design. But the Lord of Hosts, who is wise in council, and wonderful in working, will find some other way to destroy our enemies, wherein the hand of his providence should more remarkably be seen, that so no flesh should glory in its own wisdom or strength, but that salvation might appear to be from the Lord alone. The rest of this month was spent without any other matter of moment happening therein.

The Governor and Council of the Massachusetts, taking into serious consideration the many merciful occurrences that had been returned upon us, notwithstanding the mixing of many dispensations of a contrary nature, thought themselves bound to make some public acknowledgement thereof, to him whose name alone is worthy to be praised. The 29th of June was set apart as a day of public Thanksgiving to God, who had remembered his people thus in their low estate. And that matter of Thanksgiving might not be wanting at the day appointed; the very day before were most of our English captives brought back from the Indians, and many more soon after, to the number of sixteen, whose mouths might then well be filled with laughter; and their tongues with singing, both of themselves and, and all that were any way concerned in their welfare.

And as this day appointed for solemn and public Thanksgiving was ushered in by several special mercies so also was it followed with many remarkable benefits. For besides the preserving the town of Northampton, March the 14th, and Hadley, June the 12th, by the timely sending of our forces the very night before they were assaulted; the saving the people of Marlborough from being cut off, was very observable, when Mr. Graves by occasionally going from the sermon with the extremity of the tooah-ach; March 26th, discovered the Indians ready to assault the town, and the people might have been cut off, had not that accident happened. It is certain that after the end of this month, the power of the enemy began every where to fail; for the body of the enemy that had lurked about Connecticut river all this spring, being visited with fundry diseases, disappointed of the fishing, and put by their planting, began to be at variance amongst themselves; the Hadley and Pocumtuck (now Deerfield) Indians quarreling with Philip for bringing all this mischief about, and oc-sioning the English and them to fall out, with whom they had always good correspondence, and lived lovingly together, but now they were like to be ruined by the war. This quarrel proceeded to that height, that from that time forward, those several Indians that had for so long time been combined together, resolved now to part, and every one to shift for themselves, and return to their own homes; Philip to Mount Hope, and the Narrhaganset to their own country again; the Nipne's and the river Indians bending their course westward, others northward, towards Pennicook, upon Merrimack, intending to shift for themselves as well as they could for the future; all which is like to be the real and true state of the case with the Indians which were our enemies; for the next news we heard of Philip, was that he had returned back to Mount Hope, now like to become Mount Misery unto him and his vagabond crew, and that his friends and allies that had hitherto stood as neutrals, waiting only which way the scale of success and victory would turn, began now to sue for mercy at the hands of the English: The Massachusetts government having understood something of this, nature, put forth a declaration, that whatsoever Indians should within fourteen days next ensuing, come in to the English, might hope for mercy. Amongst sundry that came in, there was one named James, the printer, the superadded title distinguishing him from others of that name ; who being a notorious apostate, that had learned so much of the English as not only to read and write, but had attained likewise some skill in printing, and might have attained more (had he not like a false villain ran away from his master before his time was out) he having seen and read the said declaration of the English, did venture himself upon the faith thereof, and came to sue for his life ; he affirmed, with others that came along with him, that more Indians had died since this war began, of diseases (such as at other times they used not to be acquainted with) than by the sword of the English.

Not long after many of them came and offered themselves, to the number of near two hundred, men, women, and children ; and many more would have done the like ; but their consciousness of guilt made them conclude that their cruelties and barbarous murder could never be forgiven by the English. But what occurrence happened next shall be declared in their order. About the end of June news was brought to Boston that Philip with a small party of his men lurked about Swanzy or Rehoboth, and that he might easily be taken ; an Indian offering to bring them to the place where they might find him ; whereupon soldiers were instantly sent away from Boston, who spent some time in searching all the woods on that side, of the country, but at last were forced to return, having mis-

fed our soldiers upon the same account, under Major Bradford, who by the help of some Indians of Cape Cod, always true to the English interest, not only escaped an ambush laid for them, whereby most of them might have been cut off, but slew many of those that laid in wait for them, without any loss to themselves; yea further, a squaw Sachem of Seaconet, one of Philip's allies, having first sent three messengers to the Governor of Plymouth, to sue for life and liberty, promising submission to their government on that condition; but understanding that Plymouth forces were abroad, before her messengers returned, she with her people, about ninety in number, rendered themselves, upto Major Bradford, so that above one hundred and ten, on a moderate computation, were killed that day.

The Connecticut forces had the like success when sent into Narrhaganset country under the command of the wonderfully successful Major, Talcot, Capt. George Denison, and Capt. Newbury, with other worthy commanders of the said forces: For, on the 2d of July, 1676, as the said commanders with the forces under them were pursuing the enemy in and about the Narrhaganset country towards Mount Hope, hearing that Philip with his black regiment of Wampanoogs was thereabouts, their Indian scouts from the top of an hill discovered a great number of the enemy that had newly pitched their station within the semicircle of a swamp. The English soldiers were all mounted on horseback, to the number of three hundred; wherefore the commanders ordered the Indians to be ready at the top of a hill, upon a signal given to run down rapidly upon the enemy, who were securely lodged in the hallow of a swamp just opposite them, while the horsemen being divided into two squadrons to ride round the hill, so that at the same instant both the horsemen upon the two wings, and the Indians a foot rushing down suddenly upon the enemy, put them into a terrible fright, making a lamentable outcry, some getting into the swamp, the rest that were prevented by the horsemen and the friendly Indians coming so suddenly upon them, were all taken prisoners; Capt. Newbury with his troop alighting from their horses ran into the swamp after them, where they killed at least an hundred, as was judged by some then present, taking also many prisoners out of those habitations of darkness, the enemy scarce daring to make any resistance; for none of the English, and but one or two of the Mohegins and Pequods were hurt in the assault: yet it was affirmed by a captain present on the place, that with those they killed and took at Warwick neck in their return home, (which were not above sixty) that they killed and took of the enemy at that time above 3000 young and old. At the same time was taken he old Squaw of Narrhagsset, colony called the old Queen.

They were necessitated with this booty to return homewards to gratify the Mohegin and Pequod Indians that accompanied them, who had done them very good service in the pursuit, having lost one or two of their men in the chace; but their return home was, as it proved in the issue, more beneficial than their longer stay might have been, to have made a fruitless pursuit after Philip, (whose time was not yet come, although hastening apace) for in their return they met 60 of the enemy, all of whom they slew and took, so as their sword returned not empty.

Among the prisoners then taken was a sprightly young fellow, seized by the Mohegins, who desired of the English commanders that he might be delivered into their hands, that they might put him to death in their own way, and sacrifice him to their cruel genius of revenge in which brutish and devilish passion they most of all delighted in. The English, though not delighted in blood, yet at this time were not unwilling to gratify their humour, lest by a denial they might disoblige their Indian friends, of whom they lately made so much use; partly also that they might have an ocular demonstration of the savage barbarous cruelty of the heathen. And indeed, of all the enemies that have been the subjects of the preceding narrative, this villain does most deserve to become an object of justice and severity; for he boldly told them that he had with his gun dispatched 19 English, and that he had charged it for the 20th, but not meeting with another, and unwilling to lose a fair shot, he let fly at a Mohegin, and killed him; with which having completed his number he was fully satisfied. But, as is usually said, justice vindictive hath iron hands, though leaden feet; this monster is fallen into the hands of those that will repay him seven fold. In the first place therefore, making a great circle, they placed him in the middle that all their eyes might at the same time be pleased with utmost revenge upon him; they first cut one of his fingers round in the joint, at the trunk of his hand with a sharp knife, and then brock it off, as was formerly the custom to do with a slaughtered beast before he is uncafed; then they cut off another, and another after that, till they had finally dismembered one hand of all its digits, the blood sometimes spirting out in streams a yard from his hand; which barbarous and unheard of cruelty the English were not able to bear, it forcing tears from their eyes; yet did not the unhappy victim ever relent or shew any signs of anguish; for, being asked by his tormentors how he liked the war? he replied he liked it very well, and found it as sweet as Englishmen do their sugar. In this frame he continued till his executioners had dealt with the toes of his feet as they had done with the fingers of his hands before; all the time making him dance round the circle, and ling till he had wearied both himself and them. At last they broke the bones of his legs, after which he was forced to sit down, which it is said he silently did, till they knocked out his brains.

Within a few days after, 300 of the enemy within Plimouth jurisdiction being distressed with famine and fear of danger, came and submitted themselves to the government there; but three of the company were presently detected of a cruel murder, and villainous assault upon one Mr. Clarks house of Plimouth, by a well minded squaw that was among them (hoping that possibly such a discovery would be pleasing to the English) and accordingly adjudged forthwith to undergo condign punishment, which the rest that surrendered themselves, did not in the least resent; such kind of villains being always exempted from acts of favor and mercy. Those 200 that had newly surrendered themselves; that they might give a full proof of their fidelity, offered to lead a party of the English to a place not far off, where 20 more of the enemy might be surprized, amongst whom also was one known to be a bloody murderer of an Englishman the year before; accordingly 8 Englishmen took 14 of the said Indians, and the next day brought in all the aforesaid 20 of the enemy, together with the said murderer, who was presently after executed, and the rest taken into favor.

It is affirmed also that five or six Sachems of Cape Cod, towards the eastern part of it came with 300 Indians to make peace with the English, on the 6th of July, one of the said Sachems earnestly desiring the English that none of them might be suffered to sell any strong liquors to the Indians, the trading of which, possibly both in a measure contributed to the present mischief.

The next day, July 7th, a small party of ours, with a few friendly or christian Indians with them, killed and took seven of the enemy in the woods not far from Dedham, one of which was a Narrhaganset Sachem, who either himself informed, or by some other at that time certain intelligence was brought to Boston, that some of our enemy Indians had got to Albany, informing people there, that they might the more easily get powder and ammunition, that the English and they were now at peace.

One of the said Indians was the Sachem of Springfield, a bloody and deceitful villain; it is hoped that he is now taken in the snare from whence he shall not be suffered to escape.

Philip by this time could not but think his ruin was near at hand; yet that he might, in imitation of him that stirred up all this mischief, express the more wrath because he knew his time was but short, intended if possible to destroy one more town before his overthrow came; wherefore, on the 11th of July, with all the force he could get, or that he had left, he intended to set upon Taunton, having as was conceived, many hundreds in his company ; but his design being strangely discovered by a negro whom they had taken captive a little before, that having lived near the Indians before understood much of their language, who making his escape from them, acquainted the inhabitants with the plot ; who having timely notice, furnished themselves with soldiers, whereby they were able to repulse the enemy upon his first approach ; so as he only fired two houses, and then fled away : Except the Lord keepeth the city the watchman watcheth but in vain.

The 22d of this month of July, as is hinted before, the companies sent from Concord May 30th, up towards Hadley, having spent much time and pains in pursuit of Philip all the country over (whom they could not yet overtake) having tired themselves with many long and tedious marches through the desert woods before they returned home, some of them were sent toward Mount Hope, yet their labour was well improved, and followed with good success at the last : For in ranging those woods in Plymouth colony, they killed and took (by the help of Capt. Mosely's company, and Capt. Brattle's troop joining with Major Bradford's company of Plymouth colony) an hundred and fifty Indians, without the loss of a man.

It was feared that Philip and his company would have returned into the Nipnet country, to prevent which, several horsemen were sent to guard the passage ; but he lurked about his own country in swamps and other secret places, where he was as yet hid from the sight of the enemy, although many times they happened to lodge very near him, insomuch as an Indian captive promised in two hours time to bring our soldiers to the very place where he was : but they not being able to pass the nearest way, came a little too late ; for they being so closely pursued, hasted away, leaving much of their treasure behind them ; their kettles boiling over the fire their dead unburied, and 20 of their party were overtaken, that fell into the English hands : Philip himself, and some few of his stragling followers making their escape by a raft over an arm of the sea, into another neck of land on Pocasset side, not daring to trust himself any longer in Metapoisset woods, so full of our English soldiers, as well those of Plimouth, as of the Massachusetts colony, who almost every day meeting with some of his party, much lessened his number. Capt. Church, that active and unwearied commander of Plimouth colony, was at this time as well as long before, out upon the chase with but 18 English, and 22 Indians that were friends, had four several engagements with Philip's party, wherein he spoiled 76 of the enemy, without the loss of one of his own men. In several of these skirmishes those Indians that upon submission had their lives given them, have done notable service in hunting out the enemy in all their lurking places.

At another time they took Philip's squaw, and one of his chief councillors; and about the same time another Sachem about Poc Hec with forty Indians submitted himself to the government of Plimouth, on promise of life and liberty. It seemed that now the time of our deliverance was come, and the time also for the destruction of our enemies: For the last week in July the Massachusetts understanding that some Indians were seen roving up and down the woods about Dedham, almost starved for want of victuals, sent a small company of 26, with about 9 or 10 christian Indians, who pursued and took 50 of the enemy, with out any loss to the English; at which time also a great quantity of wampampeag and powder were taken from the enemy. That which increased this victory was the slaughter of Pomham, who was one of the stoutest and most valiant Sachems that belonged to the Narrhagansets, whose courage and strength was so great, that after he had been mortally wounded in the fight so as he could not stand, yet catching hold of an englishmen that by accident came near him, had done him an injury if he had not been presently rescued by one of his neighbours. Amongst the rest of the captives at that time was one of the said Pomham's sons, a very likely youth, and one whose countenance would have bespoke favor for him, had he not belonged to so bloody and barbarous an Indian as his father was.

These successes being daily spread abroad among the Indians, put many of them into a trembling condition, not knowing well how to dispose of themselves. Some that had been less active in these tragedies, and were rather led by others, than any wise inclined to mischief themselves of which number was one of Nipnet Sachems, called Sagamore John, who July 27th came to surrender himself to the Governor and Council of the Massachusetts at Boston, bringing along with him 180 of the enemy Indians. This John, that he might the more ingratiate himself with the English whose friendship he was now willing to seek after, did by a wile get into his hands one Matoonas, an old malicious villain, who was the first that did any mischief within the Massachusetts colony, July 14th, 1675; bearing an old grudge against them as is thought, for justice that was done upon one of his sons 1671, whose head ever since hangs upon a pole near the gibbet where he was handed up: The bringing in of this malicious caitif was an hopeful presage that it would not be long before Philip himself, the grand villain, would in like manner receive a just reward of his wickedness and murders.

Sagamore John, who came in the 27th of July, affirmed that he had never intended any mischief to the English at Brookfield the last year (near which village it seems his place was) but that Philip coming over night amongst them was forced, for fear of his own life, to join with them against the English. Matoonas also when he was brought before the Council, and asked what he had to say for himself, confessed that he had rightly deserved death, and could expect no other, adding withal, that if he had followed their counsel, he had not come to this ; for he had seemed to favor the praying Indians and the christian religion, but like Simon Magus, by his practice afterwards discovered quickly that he had no part nor portion in that matter.

About this time several parties of English within Plimouth jurisdiction, were willing to have a hand in so good a matter as catching of Philip would be, who perceiving that he was now going down the wind, were willing to hasten his fall. Amongst others, a small party went out of Bridgewater, July 31st, upon a discovery, and by providence were directed to fall upon a company of Indians where Philip was ; they came up with them, and killed some of his particular friends : Philip himself was next to his uncle that was shot down, and had the soldier that had his choice which to shoot at, known which had been the right bird, he might as well have taken him as his uncle ; but, tis said that he had not long cut of his hair that he might not be known : The party that did this exploit were few in number, and therefore not being able to keep together close in the rear, that cunning fox escaped away thro' bushes undiscerned in the rear of the English : That which was most remarkable in this design, was that trembling fear appeared to be upon the Indians at this time, insomuch that one of them having a gun in his hand, well loaded, yet was not able to fire it off, but suffered an English soldier to come close up to his breast, and so shot him down, the other not being able to make any resistance; nor were any of the English hurt at that time.

The like terror was seen in others at that time for within two days after Capt. Church the terror of the Indians in Plimouth colony, marching in pursuit of Philip with about 20 Englishmen and 20 reconciled Indians, took 23 of the enemy, and the next day following them by their tracks, fell upon their head quarters, and killed and took about 130 of them, losing only one man. In this engagement God did appear in a more than ordinary manner to fight for the English, for the Indians by their number, and other advantages of the place were so conveniently provided, that they might have made the first shot at the English and done them much damage, but one of their own countrymen in Capt. Church's company espying them, called aloud unto them in their own language, telling them that if they shot a gun they were all dead men; with which they were so amazed, that they durst not once offer to fire at the English, which made the victory the more remarkable. Philip made a very narrow escape at that time being forced to leave his treasures, his beloved wife and only son to the mercy of the English. Skin, for skin, all that a man hath will he give for his life. His ruin being thus gradually carried on his misery was not prevented but augmented thereby; being himself acquainted with the sense and experimental feeling of the captivity of his children, loss of friends, slaughter of his subjects, bereavement of all family relations, and being stripped of all outward comforts, before his own life should be taken away. Such a sentence passed upon Cain, made him cry out, that his punishment was greater than he could bear. This bloody wretch hath one week more to live an object of pity, but a spectacle of divine vengeance, his own followers beginning now to plot against his life, that they might make the better terms for their own; as they did also seek to betray Squaw Sachem of Pocasset, Philip's near kinswoman and confederate. For,

August 6th, an Indian willing to shift for himself, fled to Taunton, offering to lead any of the English that would follow him, to a party of Indians, which they might easily apprehend which 20 persons attempted, and accordingly seized the whole company, 26 in number, all but the Squaw Sachem herself, who intending to make an escape from the danger, attempted to get over the river, or arm of the sea near by, upon a raft or some pieces of broken wood;

but whether tired and spent with swimming or starved with cold and hunger, she was stark naked in Metapoiset, not far from the water side, which made some think that she was first half-drowned, and so ended her wretched life just in that place where the year before she had helped Philip to make his escape; her head being cut off and set upon a pole in Taunton, was known by some Indians, then prisoners, which set them into a horrible lamentation; but such was the righteous hand of God in bringing at last that mischief upon themselves, which they had without cause long exacted against others.

Philip, like a savage wild beast, having been hunted by the English forces through the woods above an hundred miles backward and forward, at last was driven to his own den upon Mount Hope, where he retired with a few of his best friends into a swamp, which proved but a prison to keep him fast till the messengers of death came by divine permission to execute vengeance upon him, which was thus accomplished.

Such had been his inveterate malice and wickedness against the English, that despairing of mercy from them, he could not bear that any thing should be suggested to him about a peace, insomuch that he caused one of his confederates to be killed for propounding an expedient of peace; which so provoked some of his company, not altogether so desperate as himself, that one of them that was killed) fled to Rhode Island, whither the brave Captain Church was newly retired to recruit his men for a little time, being much tired with hard marches all that week, informing them that Philip was fled to a swamp in Mount Hope, whither he would undertake to lead them that would pursue him. This was welcome news, and the best cordial for such martial spirits; whereupon he immediately, with a small company of men, part English and part Indians, began another march, which shall prove fatal to Philip, and end that controversy between the English and him. For coming very early to the side of the swamp, his soldiers began to surround it and (whether the devil appeared to him in a dream that night, as he did unto Saul, foreboding his tragical end, it matters not) as he was endeavoring to make his escape out of the swamp, he was shot through the heart by an Indian of his own nation, as it is said, that had all this while preserved a neutrality until this time, but now had the casting vote in his power, by which he determined the quarrel that had been so long in suspense. In him is fulfilled what was said in the prophet, Wo to thee that spoilest, and thou was not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee; when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled, & when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

With Philip at this time fell five of his trustiest followers, of whom one was said to be the son of his chief captain, that had shot the first gun at the English the year before. This was done the 12th day of August, 1676, a remarkable testimony of divine favor to the colony of Plymouth, who had for the former successes, appointed the 17th day of August following, to be kept as a day of solemn thanksgiving to Almighty God. There having been so strange a turn of providence observed in the late successes obtained in and about Plymouth colony, it may not be amiss here to enquire into the progress and continuance thereof, after the slaughter of Philip that grand Rebel.

In the preceeding narration mention hath been made of one Captain Church, whom God hath made an instrument of signal victories over the Indians in that colony, and of great advantage in that respect to that whole jurisdiction. It happened that the said Capt. Church some time in June, of this present year 1676, passing over in a canoe from Pocasset to Rhodisland, as he used frequently to do, (having had much employment upon the said neck of land so called) several Indians whom he had known before at Lakenham, a village near Plymouth, beckoned to him, as if they had a mind to speak with him; he having had so much experience as well as others of their treachery, was not willing to adventure too.

hastily to come near them: but when they seemed to urge very much, and made signs to him, and at last laid down their guns in his sight, he began to think with himself there might be something in the matter more than ordinary; therefore he resolved to go a little nearer to the shore, and then he perceived they had a great mind to speak with him, using much importunity for that end, insomuch that he ventured to go ashore amongst them, having but one Englishman and two Indians with him; he directed them to keep off the canoe while he discoursed with the Indians on shore. As soon as he came among them, they told him they were weary of fighting, and that they had fought so long by Philip's instigation, but they could not tell for what end, and therefore were resolved they would fight no longer, and all they desired of him was, that he would make way for them to the Governor, that they might live quietly amongst the English as they had done before, and that they would deliver up their arms, or would go out with them if he pleased to accept of them; and fight for him; to that end they desired a time to parly with him further about that business, at what time and place he would appoint: He told them he would meet them two days after at Seaconet, a place up high upon the said neck, about 12 o'clock; accordingly he came to the said place, and found the same Indians, with some others, and their

Snuke Squaw, or chief woman of that plantation, there ready to meet him.

After they had fallen into discourse about the beginning of the war, as well as the success and mischief of it, they would have put the blame off from themselves, and laid it upon the English: But he presently convinced them by an undeniable evidence, that they first began the war: For said he, upon this Pocasset July 7th, 1675, you first fought with some of Rhode Island, whereof one was my own servant, whose leg you brake and the same day you shot at myself and company, before we meddled with you. They were so fully convinced herewith, that they found nothing to reply, but fell into other discourse about a peace which they was very desirous to obtain upon any equal terms, as was said before. There were about fifteen of the Indians present, besides their Snuke Squaw (which is with us their Governess or Lady) in conclusion they engaged forener after to leave Philip, and to go out with him; which they did forthwith, as soon as he had obtained a peace for them with the Governor.

It is here to be observed, that these were not properly Philip's Indians, but belonged to the Seaconet Squaw, who was nearly related to Philip, and her subjects had hitherto fought in Philip's quarrel till they saw nothing but misery and mischief like to be the issue of it to themselves, as well as their neighbours. About 20 or 30 of these Saconet Indians have constantly gone out with Capt. Church ever since, and not only been faithful and serviceable to him, but very successful in every enterprize they have gone about, nor hath he lost any of them in any skirmish with the other Indians. And it is said that this act of these Indians broke Philip's heart as soon as ever he understood it, so as he never rejoiced after, or had any success in any of his designs, but lost his men one time after another, till himself at last fell into the hands of those under Capt. Church's command. For at the swamp when Philip was slain, Capt. Church appointed an Englishman and an Indian to stand at such a place of the swamp, where it happened Philip was breaking away; the morning being wet and rainy, the Englishman's gun would not fire; the Indian having an old musket with a large touch hole it took fire the more readily, with which Philip was dispatched, the bullet passing directly through his heart, where Jacob thrust his darts into rebellious Absalom.

Thus did divine vengeance retaliate on this notorious traitor, that had against his league and covenant risen up against the government of Plymouth, to raise up against him one of his own people, or one that was in league with him, as he was with the English: The Indian that did this execution was called Alcerman of Saconet, that had never done any act of hostility against the English. By these passages it is manifest, that as the hearts of all are in the hand of God, so he turns them as he pleases, either to favor his people, or to hate and deal subtilly with his servants, as seems good to him. Since this engagement with the Seaconet Indians (to leave Philip, and to go with Capt. Church) it is credibly affirmed, that such hath been their success that since June aforesaid, to the end of October following, there have been 700 Indians, subdued, either by killing or taking captive by means of Capt. Church and his company, part Indians and English, besides 300 that have come in voluntarily to submit themselves to the government of Plimouth. It appears thus by the sequel of things, that after the Lord hath accomplished his work upon his people; and he is beginning to call his enemies to an account, and punish them for the pride of their hearts, and for all their treachery and cruelty against his servants Philip's Captains have run the same fate with himself, some before and some since his own fall.

In June last one Tiasaq, a great Captain of his, his wife and child, or children being taken though he escaped himself at first, yet came thence and surrendered himself. The next notice of Philip's Indians that was brought in after Philip's death, was called Tespiquin, a notorious villain, next to Philip, he was called the black Sachem's son: It was this Tespiquin that burnt so many houses in Plimouth lately.

Capt. Church with his company were in pursuit of him in September last, two days before they could get near him, at the last, on the third day, they found the track made by the English orchards: This was something of a blind track, therefore they were forced to take up their quarters that night without discovering any place of their rendezvous. The next morning about 9 o'clock they came to their first rendezvous, from which they were just gone: At 1 o'clock they came to the second, and missing them there, they soon after came to the third track, wherein after they had marched a while, they perceived they grew very near them, by the crying of a child which they heard: The place was near Fakenham, upon Pocasset neck, so full of bushes that a man could not see a rod before him: Capt. Church ordered his men to march up together in one rank, because he discovered the Indians were hid in one range by several fires, so that by that time they all came up into an even rank very near together, within a few yards of them as he had appointed, they all suddenly rushed together in upon them, and caught hold of them, not suffering any to escape, there being about fifty of them in all: Telpiquin's wife and children were there but he was absent, as also one Jacob, and a girl that belonged to that company. The captain's horse would not admit of his tarrying till they came in, (though the Indians said they might come that night) where, fore he thought upon this project, to leave two old Squaws upon the place with victuals, and bid them tell Tespiquin that he should be his Captain over his Indians if he was found so stout a man as they reported him to be; for the Indians had said that Tespiquin could not be pierced by a bullet, for said they, he was shot twice but the bullets glanced by him and could not hurt him. Thus the Captain marched away with his booty, leaving this trap behind him to take the rest: The next morning he came to see what his trap had caught, there he found Jacob afore said (a notorious wretch) and the girl he missed before, but not Tespiquin: But within a day or two after the said Tespiquin upon the hopes of being made a Captain under Capt. Church, came after some of the company, and submitted himself in the Captain's absence, and was sent to Plimouth, but upon trial (which was the condition on which his being promised a Captain's commission under Capt. Church did depend) he was found penetrable by the English guns, for he fell down at the first shot, and thereby received the just reward of his former wickedness. About a fortnight after the surprising of Tespiquin, was one Totofon's company taken, wherein, were above 50 persons; but Totofon escaped, and is still out in rebellion, unless vengeance hath overtaken him since.

The next that was seized was one Annawan, a very subtle, politic fellow, and one of Phil.

ip's chief counsellors; he had about twelve men, and as many women and children in his company, who were discovered by their shooting at the English horses, and cattle; some of whom being taken, they made known the rest. Church at that time had but five Englishmen and twenty Indians. The place where this Annawan had betaken himself, was a ledge of rocks inaccessible but at one place, which by a few hands might easily have been defended against a great number of assailants: But Capt. Church by direction got up to their wigwams before they were aware of it; and presently told Annawan that he came to sup with him that night; whereupon the said Annawan (who had fallen flat upon the earth, expecting to have his head cut off) looked up and cried taubut, in their language, thank you, as one being much affected with the generosity of our English Captain; they found some of the English beef boiling in the kettles: After supper he had much discourse with the said Annawan, they lay down to sleep together in the wigwam; Capt. Church lying one of his legs upon Annawan, and the other upon his son, that he might have notice if any of them offered to stir: After midnight Annawan rose up, and Capt. Church was presently awake, and intended to watch after his prisoner: He thought at first he might have gone forth upon some necessary occasion; but not long after he returned again, having fetched out of a swamp hard by, two horns of powder, and a large belt of peag, supposed to be Philip's belt, all which he delivered to Capt. Church, in a way of thankful acknowledgement of his courtesy. Amongst other discourses that passed between them concerning the occasion of the war, and carrying it on, the Indian would fain have excused Philip, and laid the blame upon the praying Indians (as they are distinguished from others by that character) and others of the younger sort of his followers, who coming with their several tales (which he likened to sticks laid on a heap) till by the multitude of them a great fire came to be kindled : They make much use of parabolical expressions ; for so said Solemn, where no wood is, there the fire goes out ; so where there is no talebearer the strife ceaseth, Prov. 26, 20. But Philip had had large and long experience of the gentleness and kindness of the English, both to himself and to his people, so as unless he had borne an evil and malicious mind against the English, he would never have hearkened to those stories, contrary to his faithful promises and allegiance.

The said Annawan confessed also that he did believe by all those late occurrences that there was a great God that overruled all ; and that he had found that whatever he had done to any of those, whether Indians or English, the same was brought upon himself in after time. He confessed also that he had put to death, several of the English, that they had taken alive, ten in one day, and could not deny but that some of them had been tortured, and now he could not but see the justice of the great God upon himself, with many other things of a like nature. But whatever his confessions of this nature were, being forced from him to the power of conscience, after he was delivered up to authority, he was put to death, as he justly had deserved.

It is said that Philip when he first began his rebellion, had about 300 fighting men under him, besides those that belonged to his kinswoman Wetamoe, drowned about Taunton that had almost as many under her; and one Quenogin, a Narrhaganset Sachem that lived near him, and joined with him in his quarrel with the English: But it is certain that there are scarce any that are now left, that belonged to either of them: So although the Almighty hath made use of them to be a scourge to his people, he hath now turned his hand against them to utter destruction, and extirpation from off the face of the earth, peradventure to make room for others of his people to come in their stead.

As for the rest of the Narrhagansets that joined in Philip's quarrel, it is already declared what end they were come unto. As for the rest of the Indians, whether Nipnet, Nashaway, Pacomtuck, Hadley, or Springfield Indians, it is not so certain what is become of them;

but after their separation one from the other about July last, it was observed by all the tracks in those woods, they went still westward; and about the middle of August last, a great party of them were observed to pass by Westfield, a small town to the west of Springfield, and were judged to be about 200: News thereof being brought to Major Falcot, he with the soldiers of Connecticut colony under his command, both Indians and English, pursued after them as far as Ausotunnoog river (in the middle way betwixt Westfield and the Dutch river, and Fort Albany) where he overtook them, and fought with them; killing and taking 45 prisoners, 25 whereof were fighting men without the loss of any one of his company save a Mohegin Indian: Many of the rest were badly wounded, as appeared by the bushes being much besmeared with blood, as was observed by them that followed them a little further.

It is written since from Albany, that there were sundry lost besides the 45 aforementioned, to the number of threescore in all; and also that an hundred and twenty of them are since dead of sickness; so that vengeance seems to be pursuing of them as well as the rest. Several of their friends that belonged to Nashaway, and the places adjoining, repaired to Pascataqua, hoping to shroud themselves under the wings of some honest Indians about Quechecho, under pretence of a declaration sent out by the Governor and council of the Massachusetts in the beginning of July last; But some of our forces under Capt. Hathorne and Capt. Sill, with the help of Major Walden Capt. Frost, and others residing in those parts, being then in readiness, separated the vile and wicked from the rest, and sent them down to the Governor at Boston, where 8 or 9 of the ring leaders, such as one eyed John, Sagamore Sam, of Nashaway, chief actors of the late outrages and bloody mischief, had justice done upon them soon after. As for the massacres and calamities that beset the English further eastward, they shall in the second part of this narrative be declared.

The Indians being thus dispersed several ways, were strangely confounded and destroyed one parcel after another, until there was none left in the western or southern parts that durst make any opposition all the following part of the year. As for those that fled westward toward Albany, we shall thier leave them for the present wishing we may never hear any more of them : A person of quality informs, that at Hartford in September last, he was present at the examination of one Choos, an Indian, formerly of Connecticut, but one of the Narrhaganset for the last winter, who confessed that he was one of that company of Indians that went westward the month before, toward Hudson's river; but after the fight at Ausotun-noog, he returned back to Connecticut for fear of the Mohawkes ; and that he lay hid about Farmington, till he was almost starved ; and then he went to the sea side to make use of the oyster bank at Stratford for his relief, where he was espied by the Indians, and so brought to Hartford.

He affirmed that there were above 250 fighting men amongst those Indians that fled westward, besides women and children ; and that near 200 of them passed the great river below Albany, and were sheltered by the Indians of that place, called Moheganders ; but about 80 of them tarried on the hither side of that river, near a Dutch village. But he being convicted of fighting against the English, was condemned to die, and executed about the Narrhaganset country the last fall, hoping to shelter themselves under Uncas, but he not willing to give them countenance against the mind of his friends at Connecticut hath since abandoned them to shift for themselves, who have been most of them taken and brought in prisoners to the English this winter.

About the month of October last, Mr. Stanton chanced to come from Seaconet with 3 Indians in his company, Pequods or Mohegians, they hearing by a captive at one of the next towns, that there was a number of the enemy not far off, presently left Mr. Stanton and pursued after them, whom they soon after overtook, and made them all prisoners : Amongst them was an old man (not able to go their pace but promising to come after them, they spared his life : But as soon as the men returned at night from hunting, the old man told what had befallen their women and children, whereupon the next morning they presently following after them, overtook them, and so recovered the prisoners, and slew one of the three that carried them away ; the other two hardly escaped ; one of them is called Major Symon, being part a Pequod and part a Narrhaganset, but of extraordinary strength and courage ; he perceiving the danger they were in, challenged to fight hand to hand with any five of them with their hatchets : but they unwilling to hang their success upon the hazard of a single combat, came all towards him at once, whereupon first discharging his gun amongst the whole company, he broke through them all by force, and so escaped their hands, with one of his companions. This Symon hath been very active in killing and taking many of the enemy ; some say that he with his own hands hath taken and killed above threescore ; and either out of hatred to the enemy, or love to the English, is this last week gone with the soldiers to the eastward, in pursuit of our quarrel against them in those parts.

At another time not long before, when he was out against the enemy, he came suddenly upon a great number of them as they were spread under a steep bank, from whence leaping down into the midst of them he killed some and took others. Fighting it seems is a recreation to him, for he is seldom at home above four or five days together. Some say that in one of his former expeditions, being much wearied and spent he laid himself down to sleep, but towards morning he fell into a dream, wherein he apprehended the Indians were upon him, when suddenly rising up he espied the Indians coming toward him, but suddenly presenting his guns against them, he so frightened them, that they gave him an opportunity to make an escape from a multitude of them.

Since the beginning of December last, news coming down to Boston that mischief was done about Seaconk and Rehoboth, by some remaining Indians thereabouts, killing their faine and horses, several persons of Medfield went out after them, and pursuing them by their tracks, came upon a small party, of whom they took three, one of which escaped while some of the company were going after the rest. Those that were taken confessed there was about 60 that were lurking up and down in those woods. The said two Indians were brought in to Boston the 8th of January.

A commission was formerly granted to Peter Ephraim, an Indian of Natick, to go out in pursuit of them, with 20 of his company; a few of the English from Medfield went with him, who being soon tired with marching in the snow, returned. The Indians kept on in their design, and came across a considerable party of the enemy, having traced them till they found where they lodged over night; they surrounded them early in the morning, as their manner is, and then offered them quarter if they would yield; eight resolute fellows refused who were instantly shot, the rest were all seized the whole number was 42. This was done about the middle of January, since which several such exploits have been done by them. January 23d, the same company of Indians took 22 of the enemy, among whom were five able men, and five arms; they sent the prisoners home by five of their company, the rest went further in the chase.

January 26th, another parcel of the enemy were brought in, eight in number, of whom five were men amongst whom was the Indian called Cornelius, who three years since was indicted for killing an Englishman's cow; upon which he said to have uttered several threatening speeches, that he would kill Englishmen and their cows too; which was now remembered against him, when he was in particular called to account for having a hand in killing some of the English and Indians also in league with us, for which he was sentenced to die, and was accordingly executed the 15th of February following.

Concerning the rest of the Indians either in the colony of Plymouth, Connecticut, or the Massachusetts, there is no occurrence more of moment come to light since the end of August last, save what is last mentioned before; yet it is very remarkable, that although terms of peace were offered to all that would come in and surrender themselves (as appears by a declaration put out in July last) and that a Nipnet Sachem called John, did thereupon with a number of his company come in & offer themselves, and were accordingly secured of their lives and other concerns: yet did that trecherous villain make an escape this winter from Capt. Prentice house (under whose charge he was put, about Cambridge village) and with above 20 more fled away into the woods to fast for himself amongst the rest of his bloody companions; they were soon after pursued, but had gone too fast and too far to be overtaken. Whether it were consciousness of their own guilt, that had a hand in the blood of the English manners so well as to be confined thereunto; wild creatures ordinarily love the liberty of the woods better than the restraint of a cage. They made none acquainted with their design before they went away, and as yet little account can be given of them, only it is known that one or two of their number have since been killed, and that one or two of their families are entertained by Uncas, but what is become of the rest is uncertain; there were but seven of the company men, so they are not capable of doing any mischief. Some of late have travelled through the woods to Connecticut, but have met with no Indians, nor did they hear of any in their passing between this place and that.

And because in the present narrative there hath been frequent mention made of Uncas the Mohegin Sachem, and of his faithfulness to the interest of the English, I add in this place, that it is suspected by them that knew him best, that in his heart he is no better affected to the English of their religion, than the rest of his countrymen, and that it hath been his own advantage that hath led him to be thus true to them who have upheld him as formerly against the Pequods, so of late against the Narrhagen-sers; yet hath he not long since been convinced of the truth of our religion, and vanity of his own, as himself hath solemnly confessed; which will evidently appear by the passage that follows, which I shall here represent just as it was from under the hand of that reverend person it relates unto namely. Mr. Fitch, pastor of the church at Norwich, near unto which Uncas's place is. There was a great drought the last summer, but as it seems, it was more extreme in those parts than with us about the Massachusetts; and although probably the English might have prayed for rain themselves without any motion from the Indians, yet their address to the said Mr. Fitch on such an account, with the consequences thereof, is very remarkable, which take in his own words:

“Concerning the drought, &c. the true narrative of that providence is this. In August last such was the want of rain, that the Indian corn was only dried and parched up, but the apple trees withered, the fruit and leaves fell off as in autumn, and some trees seemed to be dead with that drought; the Indians came into town and did lament their want of rain, and that their powawes could get none in their way of worship, desiring me that I would seek to God for rain: I appointed a fast day for the purpose; the day being come it proved clear without any clouds until sun setting when we came from the meeting, and then some clouds arose; the next day remained cloudy; then Uncas with many Indians came to my house, Uncas lamented there was such want of rain: I asked whether if God should send us rain he would not attribute it to their powawes; he answered no, for they had done their uttermost and all in vain; I replied, if you will declare it before all these Indians you shall see what God will do for us; for although this year he hath shewn his anger against the English and not only against the Indians, yet he hath begun to save us, and I have found by experience twice in the like case, when we sought by fasting and prayer, he hath given us rain, and never denied us. Then Uncas made a great speech to the Indians (which were many) confessing that if God should then send rain, it could not be ascribed to their powawing but must be acknowledged to be an answer of our prayers. This day they spread more and more, and the next day there was such plenty of rain that our river rose more than two foot in height."

By all that is recorded in the foregoing narrative, there are none into whose hands it shall come, but will be sensible that the present time hath been a day of great rebuke and trouble to the poor people sojourning in this wilderness, upon whom sundry calamities have broke in at once this last as well as in the former years : In many places they have been visited with sickness and mortality, more than in many years before, depriving them of many useful persons ; amongst others the loss of Mr. John Winthrop, the late worthy Governor of the Colony of Connecticut, is as it ought to be, much lamented by all, who died at Boston, the 5th of April, 1676, in the 73 year of his age, whither he was occasionally called the last winter, to sit with the rest of the Commissioners of the united colonies, to consult about the great affairs of them, now newly engaged in these troubles from the Heathen. He was the eldest son of the famous Governor of the Massachusetts, deceased March 26, 1649 Proles similima parenti. The memory of the father, though he died so long ago, yet still lives in the minds of the surviving generation, and is like to continue much longer by the remembrance of the many eminent virtues found in this the eldest of his offspring, who being not long after, or about that time called to take up his residence in that colony, was by the importunity of the people there, prevailed with to accept of the Governor's place, which for a long time after he sustained in that colony, though annually chosen thereunto; being so well furnished with many excellent endowments, as well moral as political and philosophical, which rendered him most fit to be an healer of that people. Though we are dealing in another subject, yet shall not we pass by his tomb as we go along, without paying the homage due to the memory of so honorable a gentleman.

After all the forementioned calamities and troubles, it pleased God to alarm the town of Boston, and in that the whole country, by a sad fire accidentally kindled by the carelessness of the apprentice that set up too late over night, as was conceived; which began an hour before day, continuing three or four days, in which time it burned down to the ground 46 dwelling houses, besides other buildings, together with a large meeting house. Some mercy was observed mixt with the judgment for if a great rain had not continued all the time (the roofs and walls of the ordinary buildings consisting of such combustible matter). that whole end of the town had at that time been consumed. Whereby we see that God by his providence can turn our dwellings into alhes, without the help of either foreign or domestic enemies. Which consideration may awaken all from security and confidence in these uncertain and unstable possessions, that have no firmer foundation that may so soon after their first erection be eaten up by the flames of fire, before the iron teeth of time have had leisure to devour and feed upon them.

God grant that by the fire of all these judgments, we may be purged from our dross, and become a more refined people, as vessels fitted for our master's use.

A NARRATIVE OF THE INDIAN WARS IN NEW-ENGLAND FROM PICATAQUA TO PEMMAQUID.

THE occasion, rise and progress of the war with the Indians in the southern and western parts of New England, together with the issue and success thereof, hath in the former part of this narrative been already declared. Before an entrance be made into a relation of those troubles that beset the eastern and northern parts, it will be requisite to give some general description of the place, as being less frequented, and so more unknown than the other, like Herald's that used to blazon the field before they meddled with the charge, as an historian once said, that so the reader may not mis the truth in a story, by being unacquainted with the places connected with the discourse. Briefly therefore, that more cost and pains be not spent in the surveying a barren and rocky country, than will quit cost (the list or border here being known to be worth more than the whole cloth) that whole track of land being of little worth, unless it were for the borders thereof upon the sea coast, and some spots and skirts of more desirable land upon the banks of some rivers, how much soever it be valued by them that know nothing thereof, but by the uncertain and fallible reports of such as only sailed by the country or viewed some of the rivers and havens, but never passed through the heart of the continent. The whole being worth scarce those means that have been lost these two last years in hopes to save it.

This north part of New-England, did first, like Zarah put forth his hand, thereby inviting the adventures to twist the scarlet thread of their hopes about the same auspicious beginning they were ready to promise themselves prosperity in having that advantage before others to plant and people that part of the country. But that fair opportunity was almost quite lost by some fatal and mischievous accidents happening soon after that noble enterprise was first set on foot, as hath been already in part, and may hereafter be more fully declared.

The first place that ever was possessed by the English, in hopes of making a plantation in those parts, was a tract of land on the west side of the river Kennebeck, then called Sagatawock, since Sagadahock. Other places adjoining were soon after seized and improved for trading and fishing. The more remote and furthest northward at this time belonging to the English (Penobscot forty years since being surprized by the French, and by them held to this day) is called Pemmaquid, distant seven or eight leagues from Kennebeck, and is the utmost boundary of New England, being about forty leagues distant from the mouth of Piscataqua river Pemmaquid is a very commodious haven for ships, and hath been found very advantageous to such as used to come upon these coasts to make fishing voyages; south west or south east from whence about six or seven leagues, lies an island called Monhiggon of much use on the same account for fishing, it lying three or four leagues into the sea from Damaril's cove, a place of like advantage for the stages of fishermen in former times. There have been for a long time seven or eight considerable dwellings about Pemaquid which are well accommodated with pasture land about the haven for feeding cattle, and some fields also for tillage; all the land improveable for such uses being already taken up by such a number of inhabitants as is already mentioned.

In the mouth of the river Kennebeck lies a considerable island called Arowick, some years since purchased by Major Clarke and

Capt. Lake, two merchants of Boston, on which they built several large dwellings, with a warehouse and many other edifices near the water side, it being intended by the owners for a place of trading as well as planting; there being many of late seated there fit to carry on each design; where also was built a fort, which if it had been carefully defended, might have proved the defence and security of all that side of the country, as it used to be their magazine. Up higher beyond the river Kennebeck, four leagues eastward toward Pemmaquid is another considerable river called Sheepscot, upon the banks of which were many scattered planters, who lately flying from their dwellings for fear of the Indians, left as was judged, a thousand head of neat cattle for the use of the Indians that made the late insurrection against the inhabitants of those parts, besides their fields and barns full of corn. There is another river that issues into Kennebeck a little higher up into the country, called Pegypscot, that comes down from behind Casco Bay. This Pegypscot is the seat of the Amoskogging Indians, who have had a great, if not a principal hand in the late mischief.

Some few leagues to the south of Kennebeck lies the famous and spacious haven called Casco bay, the northeast cape of which is made by an Island called Saguin; the southern or opposite point of land is called Cape Elizabeth. Within the bosom of this bay, being a bout eight or nine leagues over at the mouth of it, are a great number of small islands, many of them being inhabited by fishermen and others ; one of the principal of those is called Jewels Island. There are many places about the bay fit to make commodious habitations, and on the south side of it is a small village called Falmouth ; all, most of it lately destroyed by the Indians.

Not far from Casco, to the southward or southwest, still is a river called Sparwick, over against which lies Richmond Island, not far from the main land, being divided therefrom by a small channel, fordable at low water ; it hath for a long time been the seat of Mr. Jordan, in right of Mr. Winter, the former if not the first proprietor thereof, whose daughter he married.

The next plantation southward is called Scarborough, a small village seated upon Black point over against which is another point, for distinction from the former, called Blue Point. This Black Point was lately the seat of Mr. Josselin, being a parcel of the province of Maine, or falling within the precinct thereof, and was formerly by patent granted to the said Josselin or his predecessors, since purchased by Mr. Scott of Boston.

Saco river lies next in order to Piscataqua, a navigable river, where Major Philips had a commodious situation lately ; at the mouth of which river lies Winter Harbour, encompassed on one side by a neck of land, formerly the property of one Mr. Winter whose name it still retains, but lately purchased by Major Pendleton, where, he enjoyed a very comfortable seat and habitation.

There is another harbour lying a little southward of Saco, made by that which is called Cape Porpoise; a convenient seat for fishermen, as are most of the other places above named. Between Cape Porpoise and Piscataqua there are but two small towns more, (tho' ambitious of great names) the one called Wells, and the other York. Wells is seated upon a small river or creek, affording a small harbour fit only for barks and smaller vessels; on each side of which town lies a small river, the first called Kennebunk, the second Maguncuck. The other town is York, formerly known by the name of Agamenticus, from a high hill of that name not far therefrom. The point of land which lies between the said towns, is called Cape Nidduck, making a small harbour likewise, into which issues another pretty river on the banks of which is situate the town of York. All or most of the forementioned towns and plantations are seated upon and near some greater or lesser river whose streams are principally improved for driving of saw mills those late inventions so useful for the destruction of wood and timber, especially of firr trees, which do so abound in those coasts, that there is scarce a river or creek in those parts that hath not some of those engines erected upon them.

The upper branches of the famous river of Piscataqua being also employed all of them that way, namely, Sturgeon Creek, Salmon falls, Newechewannick, Quechecho, Oyler River, Swaniscot, Greenland Lamprey Elele River, together with the towns of Exeter and Dover, seated upon or near some of the main branches thereof, whose principal trade is in deal boards cut by those saw-mills, since their rift timber is near all consumed. On each side of that fine navigable river of Piscataqua, down towards the mouth of it are seated on the north side, the town of Kittery, (a long scattering plantation made up of several hamlets) on the south side the town of Portsmouth, to which belongs the great island lying in the mouth of the said river, a place of considerable trade of late years, which, together with Strawberry Bank, the upper part of the said town of Portsmouth, are the magazine and chief or only place of trade and commerce for all the plantations betwixt it and Casco Bay. All the said plantations have in these two last years, 1675 and 1676 felt more or less of the rage and cruelty of the barbarous and perfidious Indians belonging to that side of the country, as shall more particularly be declared in what follows, after a short discourse of the first planting of that side of the country, which may serve as a kind of prologue to the following tragedy.

This part of New England began first to be planted about the same time with Virginia, viz. in the year 1606. There the first letters patent granted by the King, for the limitation of Virginia, did extend from 34 to 44 degrees of north latitude, and was divided into two parts namely the first and the second colony; the former was appropriated to the city of London, the other to the cities of Bristol, Exeter and town of Plymouth, each of which had laws, privileges, and authority for the government, and advancing their several plantations alike as saith Capt. Smith in his history of Virginia and New England. This second colony of New England, promising but little advantage to the undertakers, by reason of its mountainous & rocky situation, found but few adventurers forward to promote the planting thereof after the death of Sir John Popham, who the first ever procured men or means to possess it; for when the main pillars are removed, what can be expected but that the whole building should fall to the ground. Yet notwithstanding the discouragements the first planters met within their first winter seasoning, in that cold and rocky desert (which made them all return home in the year 1608) Sir Francis Popham his son, having the ships and provision which remained of the company, and supplying what was necessary for his purpose, sent divers times to the coast for trade and fishing, of whose loss or gain, as saith my author, himself was best able to give an account ; and some of the ships sent by him, and the Earl of Southampton, with other noble adventures, did bring home some of the natives of the place in one of the following years, by whose informations some of the first undertakers were encouraged once more to try the verity of their hopes, and see if possibly they might find something that could induce a fresh resolution to prosecute so pious and honorable a work.

But, in the mean time, before there was yet any speech or endeavor to settle any other plantations in those parts, that about Sagadahack being thus abandoned for the present, by the first undertakers, the Frenchmen immediately took the opportunity to settle themselves within our limits, being understood by those of Virginia, they discreetly taking into their consideration the inconveniences that might arise by suffering them to harbor there, Sir Samuel Argal was sent with a commission to displace them, which he with great discretion, dexterity, and judgment, performed about the year 1613, which made way for the plantation at Nova-Scotia, granted afterwards by King James to Sir William Alexander, one of his Majesty's most honorable council of Scotland. The said Argal seized the forts which the Frenchmen had built at Mount Mansel, St. Croix and Port Real, and carried away their ordnance and provisions to the colony of Virginia, to their great benefit. The said places were held by the English many years after, till about the year 1695 by commission from the Scotch Lord aforesaid; but how his right came afterwards to be alienated to any of the French nation, doth not concern us with reference to the business in hand, further to enquire.

Things remaining in this posture for the space of near seven years, some of the first adventures apprehensive of better hopes of good that might ensue by a fresh attempt, resolved to set the design a foot a second time, to which end several ships were sent on that account in the year 1615, but with as bad success as the former; for in the year before, viz. 1614, Capt. Smith, desirous to promote the colony of New England, as well as that of Virginia, came thither with two vessels, and returned back to England in the least of them, with intent to be there again that next year to promote the said plantation; but after he was gone, one Thomas Hunt, master of the ship he left behind, like a dishonest man, to prevent the carrying on the plantation, that he and a few merchants might wholly enjoy the benefit of the trade of the country, after he had made his voyage, seized upon 24 of the poor innocent natives, that in confidence of his honesty, had put themselves into his hands, then clapping them under hatches, carried them away to Malego, whither he was bound with the fish he had made upon the coast, for that market; but this vile act, although it kept him forever after any more employment in those parts, yet that was the least part of the mischief that attended his wicked practice; for upon the arrival of the adventures ships the next year, two natives of the place that had been some years in England, and coming back unto the said ships, as soon as they understood the injury so treacherously done to their countrymen they contracted such a hatred against our whole nation, that although one of the said natives died soon after, yet the other called Epenow, studied how to be revenged, which he so far found means to effect that the frustrated this second attempt of settling a plantation in these parts.

Yet did not the adventures cast off all hopes of carrying on their design, Wherein Providence within a few years so favored them that one or more of the savages called Tisquantum and Samoset, carried away by Hunt, was brought back to Newfoundland, from whence he was soon after conveyed by the prudent endeavor of Captain Mason (then Governor of the plantation began upon Newfoundland) into the hands of some of the adventures, by whose means they hoped to work a peace betwixt the said natives on that coast where the fire had been kindled before; for the adventures employed Capt. Thomas Darmer, a prudent and industrious gentleman, to settle the affair of the plantation, now a third time reviv'd.

again about Kentucky about the year 1619. By his prudence and care a lasting peace was made betwixt the natives of the place and the English, who were but a little before so abhorred by them, for the wrong formerly received so as the plantation began at last to prosper, and continue in good liking, and assurance of the friendship of their neighbors that had been lately exasperated against them. This Tisquantum beforementioned, was not a little instrumental and helpful to the plantation begun at New Plymouth about the following year, 1620 in their weak beginnings, there being frequent mention of his name, as also of one Samoset, a native of the same place, by the like providence brought back to Kennebeck, and from thence with Tisquantum came to the new planters at Patuxet, or Plimouth, and brought them into acquaintance with Massasoit, the Sachem about those parts; without whose friendship that new plantation would hardly have subsisted long.

This story premised, is the more to be observed in this place because the friendship upon the means and occasions aforesaid, confirmed between the Indians in these eastern parts and the English had continued steadfast and constant to this year, when it was broken by another treacherous and wicked practice of a like nature, and parallel to that of the aforesaid Hunt, as may more fully be declared afterwards.

Possibly the like satisfaction may prove the more probable means to procure a settled peace. But to return whence this digression hath been made. Some years were spent to bring things to this issue : The adventures were put to much care and pains before they could get their patent confirmed and renewed again ; Many obstructions they met with from some interlopers that began to look into the trade of this country, and would irregularly have had a share therein, or made it common to all traders, to which end they petitioned to a parliament then called, to bring about their ends, but at the last it was settled firmly in the hands of sundry noble and worthy patentees, Lords, Knights, gentlemen, and merchants, commonly known by the name of the council of Plymouth, who had the absolute power under the King for making all grants, and disposing of all lands from the 40th 48th degrees of north latitude ; all which was accomplished about the year 1621. Some printed relations that speak of these transactions, write much of the flourishing state, and hopeful prosperity of this plantation, published about fifty years since, yet did it never appear by what followed, that any considerable advantage did ever accrue to the first undertakers, from this their new plantation of the eastern parts, unless by the trade of fish and furs, which latter continued not long ; that managed it by their own particular stocks and personal endeavors ; and if without offsence it may be spoken, the multitude of patents soon after granted to gentlemen of broken fortunes, have provided but places of an honorable exile or confinement, whither many deserving persons of better education than fortune, were sent to shift for themselves in a foreign land, without being farther troublesome to those nearer home, on whom they had their hopes and dependance; yet it must not be denied but that some of the undertakers were at vast expence, casting their bread upon these waters, where none of their friends and relations have as yet had an opportunity to find it; The reason of which is not hard to give, in reference to all those lands and territories that lie to the eastward of Piscataqua river. One main cause had been the multiplicity of grants and patents for the dividing of the said tract of land for besides the strife that hath been occasioned by the intricacy and indistinctness of their liberties and bounds, (enough to have maintained a greater number of lawyers than ever were the inhabitants) if the grantees had been supplied with moneys proportionable to their suits and controversies about their bounds and jurisdictions, which sometimes they have been ready to decide with their swords, witness those fatal names imposed on such accounts upon some places belonging to those parts, as Bloody Point, Black Point, Blue Point, and every considerable parcel of land being by patent granted to several particular persons hindred the erecting of townships and villages, which if it had been otherwise disposed of, might have been full of towns, and well peopled, and thereby the inhabitants had been able to have stood upon their guard, and defended themselves against the common enemy, whereas now they were but like scopæ dissolutæ, or like his arrows that being bound up in one bundle could not be broken by an ordinary force, but being loose, were easily shapped asunder by any single hand. Another reason might be, the employing of such agents and instruments as either wanted skill or fidelity to manage what they were entrusted with which made many of the adventures long ago complain, that instead of bills of exchange and other returns which they expected) they received nothing but large inventories of the wants of their several plantations, and the servants sent over to improve them, which were all the returns that many of them ever received for the large sums of money many disbursed for the carrying on their affairs. A third reason may be the several changes of government the inhabitants have passed under, which have occasioned not only much vexation and expence to such as were upon the place, but much discouragement to several others, who by the commodiousness of the place would willingly have chosen stations in those parts, had they seen any hope of a settled government ever like to be obtained; which is not hard to demonstrate.

by giving a little touch as we pass along, on the several changes of government the places aforementioned have been moulded into, and the several proprietors that of late have claimed interest in the land. In the year 1624, a patent was granted by the council of Plymouth, the grand proprietors, to Capt. Mason, for a large tract of land about Piscataqua; but it not being distinctly bounded, himself with Sir Ferdinando Gorges, obtained a joint patent in the year 1539, for the land betwixt the east of Sagadahock, and west of Naumkeag; but that also interfering with the bounds granted before that time to sundry gentlemen merchants that had obtained a patent from the south of Charles river, to the northward of Merrimack, Capt. Mason's bounds were afterwards by consent (as is said) of his agent or agents, reduced to some branches about Piscataqua river (who yet could not agree with those that acted in the name of Shrewsbury men) but being wholly neglected by the pretended proprietor or his succession (till of late days) was by the desire of the inhabitants yielded up to the Massachusetts government, near twenty years since.

In the year 1630, a patent was granted by said council of Plymouth (signed by the Earl of Warwick, and Sir Ferdinando Gorges, and sealed with the common seal of the council aforesaid) to John De, Thomas Lupe, Grace Harding, and John Roach, of London, for a large tract of land on the south side of Sagadahock, forty miles square by the sea side, and so up into the country; John D. aforesaid, and his partners, took in another as partner an associate with them, Mr. Richard Dummer, of Newbury, in England, in the year 1633, to whom they delivered the original patent, with an order from them, and in their name to take up the land described in the patent, but he being denied opportunity to effect it, as also a ship formerly sent by the patentees for that end, not accomplishing their desire, they not long after sold all their interest in the said patent, to one Mr. Rigby, a Lancashire gentleman, who made Mr. Cleaves his agent to manage the business of his purchased interest in the said patent: to whom Mr. Dummer was ordered to deliver the original patent, which accordingly he did: What trouble was occasioned soon after between the said Mr. Cleaves and Mr. Umes, agent for Sir Ferdinand Gorges, is well known to the inhabitants of the place and need not be here mentioned; not yet how the said Mr. Right came forward to lose his interest (at least with the inhabitants) in the patent.

In the year 1632, Sir Ferdinando Gorges not resting in the joint patent obtained for himself and Cpt. Mason, obtained a distinct patent for himself and got it confirmed by King Charles the first, of blessed memory, for all that large tract of land from Sagadahock to Piscataqua river, and so about an hundred miles up into the country, by the name of the province of Maine. What benefit and improvement was ever made thereof by his agents or successors, is best known to themselves; but for the inhabitants, who upon one account or another had been induced, either by any precedaneous grant or liberty from himself or his agents, to take up any land within the bounds of the said province; they finding much inconvenience and trouble for want of an orderly and settled government, did at the last, petition the general court of the Massachusetts to be taken under their jurisdiction and government (reserving the liberties and privileges of their former purchases and grants, as to the title possession, and propriety to themselves) which was granted them, though not only and altogether upon the grounds on which it was desired by the petitioners. Yet notwithstanding all this, were not things settled either to the comfort or content of the inhabitants: For sometimes some demanded right of jurisdiction over them, by virtue of Sir Ferdinand's patent, sometimes Commissioners employed by his Highness the Duke of York, attempted to settle a government amongst the people; sometimes they tried what might be done by agreement amongst themselves; but after their return for England, by one mean; or other the government replas'd again into the hands of the Massachusetts, although a superseas thereunto seems to have been put by an order from his Majesty this last year.

By the several vicissitudes and changes of government, the flourishing of the said province hath been much obstructed, which else might have been much advanced, and the inhabitants been put into a capacity to have secured themselves against the late barbarous incursions of the Indians; and possibly those exorbitancies that many of the present proprietors have run into, to the just provocation of the Indians, might thereby have been prevented, and so the mischief also which hath ensued might thereby have been averted: For a well ordered government would never have suffered those things that now were connived at, which if they had been timely looked into by such as had absolute or positive and unquestioned power of rule in their hands, would have been otherwise ordered, the present mischief that is come upon those places, might thereby have been, if not prevented, yet more easily redressed, than now is it like to be.

As for the tract of land that lies eastward beyond Kennebeck, betwixt that and Penmaquid, it is said to have belonged to one Mr. Aldworth and his successors, who was Alderman of Bristol, and on that had a patent thereof, and employed some as his agents, that did sometimes reside upon the place, and was lately settled in some order of government by his Highness the Duke of York's Commission.

ers, by whom also was an agreement made betwixt the Sagamores of the Indians in those parts and the English, at a court kept by their appointment in Kennebeck, which if it had been observed, might in all probability have prevented in great measure the quarrel which is now fallen out betwixt the English and the Indians: For upon some jealousies of the rising of those Indians about twelve or thirteen years since, it was agreed that if any mischief should happen to be done by the English or Indians one against another, though it were to the killing any person, neither side should right themselves, but complaint should be made to the Sagamores if the Indians did the wrong, and to the court if it was done by the English: both which did promise satisfaction should be made for the preventing any quarrel: The names of the Sachems, as likewise of them that were in power at the court, do still remain upon public record. But matters of government in those parts being since collapsed, no authority more than what was merely voluntary and persuasive being owned, things are now brought to that miserable state which follows next to be declared.

Ever since the first settling of any English plantation in those parts about Kennebeck, for the space of about fifty years, the Indians always carried it fair, and held good correspondence with the English, until the news came of Philip's rebellion, and rising against the inhab-stants of Plimouth colony in the end of June, 1675; after which time it was apprehended by such as had the examination of the Indians about Kennebeck, that there was a general ferment amongst them, that they should be required to assist the said phillip, although they would not own that they were at all engaged in the quarrel. The like jealousies did appear in all the Indians that inhabited to the eastward of Piscataqua, which plainly shewn that there was a design of a general rising of the Indians against the English all over the country (possibly as far as Virginia, the Indians there making insurrections the same year) and that many if not most of them were willing it should succeed, although the oldest and wisest of them did not like it, fearing the issue, as they had cause: But many of the young men about Casco Bay, and Amoscogging, were certainly known to flock thither the last year, and did, sundry of them, come short home: For herein they acted but like savages, as those of Virginia did fifty years before, shewing themselves friendly and courteous to their new neighbors till they had opportunity to do them mischief. So that notwithstanding many of the inhabitants in the eastern, as in the western parts of the country, that were wont to trade with the Indians, were not willing to believe any such purpose among them, but were ready to think some of the ruder sort of the English, by their imprudent and irregular actions, have driven them into this rebellion; yes his it too evident that the said Indians (who naturally delight in the bloody and deceitful actions) did lay hold of any opportunity that might serve a pretence for their barbarous practices. Indians about Wammet and Piscataqua, that had joined with their countrymen in their rising against the English the last winter, when they were pinched with hunger, in the cold winter following returned back to the English, and desired to make peace, and firmly engaged to continue their wonted friendship yea; some, sorry of them, as if they were really for their murders and cruelties, of their own voluntary motion came with the prisoners they had taken, and resigned them up to the English, yet when their own ends were answered and another opportunity was offered of doing further mischief of a like nature, they presently returned to their former practice, as is well known of Simon and Andrew, that had killed some, and led others captive the last spring from Bradford and Haverhill, who came in the end of June to Major Waldern's bringing home English prisoners with them, yet did the very same Indians within less than two months after join with the Amoscoggan and Kennebeck Indians, in committing the sad tragedies that were last acted in those parts; yet was he and his partner suffered to escape for want of sufficient guarding the prison where they were put in order for further trial. But sero sapient phyrages ; it is hoped that we shall after some few more experiences of this nature, learn to beware of this subtle brood and generation of vipers. Ever since enmity was put between the seed of the women and the seed of the serpent, it hath been the portion of her seed in every generation, and in every nation to meet with the sad effects of that enmity ; nor can they ever expect to find better dealing from any of the other sort, further than either fear of their power or hope of benefit by their favor may induce them to another disposition, as we the inhabitants of New England have found by his late and sad experience in reference to these Pagans in the west amongst whom our lot is cast, they proving as one says of the Mahometans in the east, like a nest of hornets, that if any one of them chance to be provoked they will be all about his ears that comes near them. But it is now time to begin with the particulars of the tragedy itself, that the reader account not the prologue too long. It was on the 24th of June, 1675, when the first mischief was done by the Indians about Mount Hope, before 20 days were over, the first fire shall began to kindle in these more remote and northerly bounds of the said country, or two hundred and fifty miles distance, and upon this occasion, the 11th of July 1675, a letter was brought to Kennebeck from one Henry Sawyer, an inhabitant of York signifying the news of the Indians rising about Plimouth, and that a course was taken to disarm the Indians along the shore. This rumour did so far awaken the inhabitants of those parts, that very next day, at a general meeting of the English, at one Capt. Pattishall's house, several offered themselves as volunteers to go up the said river of Kennebeck, to make discovery of the Indians' fidelity, or else to fight them if there was occasion. The third day after marching up the river to Quegebeck, they met with the inhabitants of Sheepscot river, which is a river lying about twelve or fourteen miles to the north-east of Kennebeck. Divers of the Indians thereabouts, by the persuasion of one Mr. Walker, that used to trade with them, brought down an inconsiderable part of their ammunition, as a few guns, a little powder and shot, with a few knives. About 7 of the Kennebeck Indians, and 5 of those called Amoscoggan Indians, about Pegypscot (a river more southward towards Casco) made this pretence of bringing in their arms, Capt. Lake Capt. Pattishall, with Mr. Wiswall, in whose hands was settled a kind of military power for those parts, were sent for further to examine the said Indians of whom upon examination they saw reason to suspect some, if not all, whereupon they sent messengers a second time to the Amoscoggan Indians, and also a letter to Mr. Walker, to send down their arms and ammunition to them for their greater security. After Mr. Wiswall was returned home, the 5 Amoscoggan Indians aforesaid, brought in their guns, but probably with no good intent; for an Indian called Soven, having an ax in his hand, struck at one Hosea Mallet, a Frenchman, but was prevented from doing him mischief; however, the said Indian was presently bound and put into a cellar. Some of the English that used to trade with those Indians were ready to excuse the Indian, saying he was drunk, or that he was a distracted fellow, Mr. Wiswall, with the other two examiners, looked upon those as more excused, and altogether groudless, for one of them to this day affirms that he was as rational and sensible as any of the rest.

The ancient Indians being asked what they thought was meet to be done in the said case, said he was worthy to die for such an affront, yet they would be glad if his life might be spared, offering to be jointly bound in his behalf, to pay 40 beaver skins at the next fall voyage, giving their hands in token of their fidelity and also leaving their arms in the hands of the English as a pledge of their faithfully keeping those articles of peace concluded on betwixt them. If they proved themselves honest men they were to have their arms again, which was accordingly performed the last June 1676; they having in the mean time carried themselves peaceably toward the English. The day after, viz. July called Rotbinhood, with great applause of the rest, made a dance, and sang a song to declare their content in what was transacted; and so they parted, setting the Indians at liberty that had thus engaged for their friends Sowen, the Indians; but yet to this day not one skin of beaver was ever paid to the English, as was promised; the Indians all this while were well provided for victuals by Capt. Lake, with other supplies of rum and tobacco, even to the disgusting of some English then present.

But the Indians left as hostages upon Sowen's account, however civilly they were treated ran all away at the last, trusting more to the celerity of their own feet, than to the civility of their English friends, who after they were escaped, joined with a parcel of their fellows soon after about twenty in all, in robbing the house of one Mr. Purchase, an antient planter about Pegypscot river, and a known trader with the Indians, whatever wrong may be pretended by the said Indians, as done them in their trading (of which more may be spoken afterwards) that will in no wise excuse their perfidious treachery and falsehood, in breaking covenant with the English, dissembeling and seeking all advantages of cruelty against their English neighbours, of which in the following winter and summer, 1676, there will be a more full and undeniable discovery. This was done in the beginning of September, 1675. Those Indians that first assaulted Mr. Purchase's house, did not other mischief than plundering it of strong liquor and ammunition, also killing a calves or two, with a few sheep, but no more than what they eat, and spoiling a feather bed by ripping it open to turn out the feathers, contenting themselves with the case, which they might more easily carry away. They offered no incivility to the mistress of the house (her husband and sons being at that time from home) yet one of her sons approaching near the house and finding it possessed by those new inhabitants, he rode away with all speed, and yet no faster than there was need, for an Indian followed him with a gun under his coat to have got within the reach of his piece.

It is said that at the first they used fair words and spoke of trading, but as they went away, told those of the house, that there were others, coming after that would deal far worse with them; which within a short time after came to pass, for these were but the messengers of death which was soon after inflicted, and that in a most barbarous manner upon sundry inhabitants of the neighboring plantations.

The English in those parts being much incensed hereat, 25 of them soon after going up Casco-Bay in a sloop and two boats to gather Indian corn, and to look to what they had upon the said Bay, near Amoscoggan river; when they came near the houses they heard a knocking and a noise about the houses, and presently espied two or three Indians, who as yet did not see them. The English being come a good way from their vessel, endeavored to get between the Indians and the woods, which when they perceived, they ran toward the water side. but the English in pursuit killed one of them and wounded another, who however escaped away in a canoe across the river, a third running back toward the woods, fled to the other Indians and acquainted them with what was done, who presently came down and lay in wait to intercept the English, that thought of no danger, but scattered themselves all about the place gather their corn, and lade the boats therewith, but before they were ready to go away, the Indians coming down, fired upon them, and forced them all into the sloop; had not some of them been better prepared than the rest, they might all have been cut off; for some little resistance being made by them that were ready with their guns, it gave the rest an opportunity to get all into the sloop, yet not without many wounds. So with much ado, they all escaped with their lives, leaving the two boats almost laden with corn, a prey to the Indians, who presently burnt one, and plundered the other of all that was therein; some are ready to think that the English did imprudently begin the quarrel, and not first enquire into what the Indians were about in the house, and seek redress according to the aforementioned agreement, made at the court at Kennebeck. But if this happened after what follows next to be related, viz. that which was done to old Mr. Wakely and his family, the English can be blamed for nothing but their negligence and security, in that having alarmed their enemies, they stood not better upon their guard, which is not very certain; for it is thought that within a few days after, or the next week, a more horrible outrage was committed upon the family of an ancient man, whose name was Wakely, an inhabitant of Casco Bay, who had some discontent, which afterwards he often bewailed, resolving either to have returned back, or else to have removed to some securer place, but he was prevented by the sons of violence before he could effect his purpose.

This old man, together with his wife, his son, and his daughter in law, (then far advanced in pregnancy) with three grand-children were cruelly murdered by those barbarous savages at one time; another of his grand-children was taken alive and led into captivity, a daughter of his was said to be carried to Narraganset, which shews that they joined with the southern Indians in the rebellion. When once these Indians had embroiled their hands in English blood, they were emboldened to the like bloody attempts in the adjacent places.

This Wakely lived so far from his neighbours, or else was encompassed with creeks or rivers, that no relief could presently be sent to him; however, Lieut. Ingersoll of Casco, the next day with a file of men, repaired to the place where his house stood, to see what was the reason of the fire they discerned the day be-

fire, where they found the house burnt to ashes, the bodies of the old man half consumed with the fire, the young woman killed, and three of the grand children having their brains beat out and their bodies laid under some oaken planks not far from the house; one girl of about 11 years old, was carried captive by them, and having been carried up and down the country some hundreds of miles, as far as Narrhaganset fort, was this last June returned back to Major Waltern's by one Squando, the Sagamore of Saco; a strange mixture of mercy and cruelty.

Soon after Capt. Bonithon's and Major Philip's dwellings were assaulted, one on the east, the other on the west side of Saco river. It is said they had seasonable notice of what was intended against them by their barbarous enemies, those Amoscoggan Indians, by the Indian of Saco, their neighbor, better minded than the rest of his countrymen, who observing a strange Indian coming to his wigwam in company with some of his acquaintance, one of whom informed him, of the rest with the stranger were gone, that the said stranger came from the westward, and that his business was to persuade the eastern Indians to fall upon the English in their dwellings here, as the rest had done to the westward. Capt. Bonithon, either upon his information, or upon the knowledge of what was done a little before at Casco, had left his house, and was retired over the river with his family to Major Phillips's garrison. Thus two are better than one, for otherwise both might have been destroyed; for upon the 18th of September following, being the seventh day of the week, about 11 o'clock those at Major Phillips's garrison saw Capt. Bonithons house on fire, which by the good Providence of God was to them as the firing a beacon giving them notice to look to themselves, their enemies being now come; for otherwise they might, to their great disadvantage, have been too suddenly surprized, for within half an hour after they were upon them, when a sentinel placed in the chamber gave notice that he saw an Indian by the fence side near a corn field. Major Phillips, not willing to believe till he might see with his own eyes, ran hastily up, another of his men coming after, cried, Major what do you mean? do you intend to be killed; at which words he turned from the window out of which he was looking. when presently a bullet struck him on the shoulder, grazing only upon it without breaking the bone. The Indians upon the shot, thinking he has been slain thereby (as they heard afterwards) gave a great shout, upon which they discerned that they were surrounded by them; whereupon they instantly fired on the enemy from all quarters, and from the flankers of the fortification, so as they wounded the Captain of the Indians, who presently leaving the assault, retired three or four miles from the place where he soon after died, as they were informed: He counselled them to leave the siege, but they were resolved not so to quit the place; nor were those within less resolute to defend it: one of the best men was soon after disabled from any further service, by a wound he received in one of the volleys made by the assailants; but that did not in the least daunt the rest of the defendants, who continued still to fire upon the enemy: This dispute lasted about an hour, after which the enemy despairing to take the house by assault, thought upon a device how to burn it.

First, firing the house of one of his tenants, then his saw-mill, hoping by that means to draw them out of the garrison to put out the fire, but missing of their purpose in that, they called out, you English cowardly dogs come out and quench the fire. They continued this sport all the afternoon continually firing upon them. The besieged hoped for relief from the towns but none came, the Major still encouraging his men to hold it out, which they manfully did all that night, when they were alarmed almost every half hour; and between whiles they could hear their axes and other instruments, knocking about the mills till the next day: Those within the house conceived they were preparing some engine wherewith to burn the house, which really was the case. For about four o'clock in the morning, at the setting of the moon when he saw a cart with four wheels, having a barricado built in the fore part to keep off shot, and filled with combustible matter, birch finds, straw, powder, and poles 20 foot long ready to fire the house; he bid them let them drive it within pistol shot, before they made any shot against them; his men were a little discourag'd at the sight of this engine; but he bid them be of good courage, and use means putting their trust in God, who, he was confident would relieve them. The cart when brought a little nearer became unweildly by reason of the barricado planted in it, and being to pass through a small gutter; one wheel stuck fast in the slough, which bro't the cart suddenly to the left, whereby the drivers lay all open to their right flanker, when they fired upon them out of the said flanker, and having to fair a shot upon them, and not being above pistol shot from the place, they killed 6 of the enemy, and wounded 15, as they found afterwards, which no doubt made them too late to repent of their resolution, not to follow their Captains counsel and example in leaving the siege; for now they presently departed: so as at sunrise those within the house espyed 40 of them marching away, but how many more were in the company they could not tell.

The Indians it seems went towards Blue Point where it is said they killed several persons, but those in the house feared they went the Major was called by his men to look out for more help, and expected their return;

but it seems their courage failed them as to another attempt upon an house so well garri-soned and manfully defended. Major Phillips sent to the town for help acquainting them with what had passed, but none was sent them either that day or the next so having spent almost all their ammunition, the people that were with him would not be persuaded to tarry longer than Tuesday morning, which constrained him and his family to remove to the town. About a fortnight after, the Indians hearing thereof, came and burnt down the empty house. There were 50 persons in the said house during the time of the siege, and but 10 able hands; they had five more that could do something, but through age or minority, not able to make any great resistance; yet it pleased God, in whose hands are all mens lives and limbs, who is never wont to fail them, who in time of danger are ready to confide in his power and goodness, as not to neglect the use of due means for their own preservation, so to order things, that not one person of all these 50 was either killed or mortally wounded. Major Phillips himself was wounded but not dangerously, at the beginning of the assault, his mills with other edifices were the first day burnt by the enemy, and so were all the houses at Saco, or most of them soon after, that were above the fishermen's stages. One Mr. Hitcock being carried captive by the enemy from the same place, died in the winter following, by eating of me poisonous root instead of ground nuts, as was reported by the Indians afterwards.

Much about the same time, five persons going up the river of Saco, were all killed by the same Indians.

These tragedies being thus acted at Casco Bay and Saco, those barbarious enemies dispersed themselves in parties intending to do all the mischief they could to the English inhabiting about that side of the country. In the same month of September they came down towards Piscataqua, doing the like spoil upon the inhabitants of the several branches of that river which they had been doing elsewhere. In the first place they burnt the two Chestyes houses about Oyster river, and killed two men that were passing along the river in a canoe, and carried away an old Irishman, with a young man taken from about Exeter, who both of them soon after made an escape to a garrison at Salmon Falls in kittery, by the help of an Indian better disposed than the rest, the first after seven weeks, the other after a month's captivity.

About the same time one Goodman Robinson, of Exeter, with his son, were travelling towards Hampton, where, as they passed along, they were waylaid by three Indians, viz. John Sampson, Cromwell, and John Linde, who shot the old man, and left him dead upon the place; his son, hearing the guns, escaped their hands by running into a swamp, whither the Indians pursued them, but could not overtake him, so he got safe into Hampton about midnight, where he related what had befallen him by the way, and how narrowly he avoided the danger, intimating likewise that he feared his father was killed, which was found too true by Lieut. Swet, who the next day with 12 soldiers of the town went to search those woods, where they found the poor old man shot through his back, the bullet having passed through his body, and was stopped by the skin on the other side. Another person of Exeter, whose name was Foulsum, was at the same time driving a pair of oxen in the same road, where soon after he heard the report of the guns when Robinson was killed, he espied the three Indians, creeping upon their bellies towards him, to do as much for him as they had done for Robinson, but leaving his oxen, he put on his horse with all speed, and so was delivered from the danger that the other fell into; it is reported that one of the Indians made a shot at him; but he was either got out of their reach, or else they missed their aim at that time. The same Indians had a little before met with another Englishman into those woods, one Charles Randlet, whom they carried captive, although he soon after escaped out of their hands, by the help of another Indian called James. It is said there were four Indians of that company, and that the fourth was sent away with Randlet, so that there were but three seen to.

gether at the killing and pursuing the other aforementioned. One of the said Indians, viz. John Samson, was killed by some of Capt. Hathborn's soldiers at Casco Bay, in September following, 1676, when the scouts of our forces came upon the Indians on a sudden, and had a small brush with them, but all the rest made a shift to get away: As for the other two, viz. Cromwell and John Linde, one of them it is said, is since killed, or taken & sold away the other is at Kennebeck, whom vengeance may also in due time overtake, as it hath done the other.

Within a few days after that barbarous fact at Oyster river, two Indians, viz. one named Andrew, and the other Hopehood, the son of him called Robinhood, assaulted the house of one Tozer at Newehetannick, wherein were fifteen persons, yet all women and children, who without all doubt had all of them fallen into the merciless hands of the too cruel and barbarous caitiffs; had not a young maid of about 18 years of age, first espyed them, who being endued with more courage than ordinarily the rest of the sex use to be (the blessing of Jael light upon her) first shut too the door, whereby they were denied entrance till the rest within escaped to the next house, that was better fortified; that young heroine kept the door fast against them so long, till the Indians had chopped it into pieces with their hatches, when entering the house they knocked the poor maid down with their hatchets, and gave her many other wounds, leaving her for dead upon the place; after which they passed on toward the next dwelling, in their way meeting with two children that had escaped the house first broken open by them, they killed one of them, of three years old, which could not follow fast enough or else they that carried it could not convey it over a fence soon enough to save themselves and it; and carried away the other of seven years old, which however was returned safe within half a year after. The poor maid that had ventured her life so far to save many others, was by a strange Providence enabled to recover so much strength after they were gone, as to repair to the next garrison, where she was soon after healed of her wounds and restored to perfect health again.

The next day toward night more of the barbarous enemies being gathered together, they made an assault upon the neighboring dwellings. The English as many as could be spared out of the garrison (not above 8 in number) pursued after them about half a mile, but night coming on, it was judged best to retreat, lest otherwise they might have been intercepted in their return home, by any of them lying in ambush, which is their usual way of doing mischief. After divers shot made on both sides, but 5 of the enemy appeared; who yet took the advantage of Capt.

Wincol's absence (whose dwelling was not far off) to burn his house and two barns more, wherein was much English corn, supposed to be above an hundred bushels in one of them. After they had done this mischief they fled away. The next day after, the same Indians or others of their fellows, came upon the other side of the river, from whence they shot over several times to some that were grinding in the mill, but after the exchanging of many shot on both sides the river betwixt them, 6 of the enemy shewed themselves in the twilight, uttering several insolent and barbarous speeches calling our men English dogs, &c. yet all this while out of reach of their shot, and then they ran away like dogs after they had done barking.

After this those very indians, as was supposed burned 5 or 6 houses about Oyster river, and killed two men, viz. one William Roberts and his son in law. The inhabitants of Dover, with some other resolute young men, being much provoked by these many insolencies and injuries done by the enemy, obtained liberty from the Major of the regiment, to try whether they could not meet with some of the Indians, by secret ambushes and skulking amongst the bushes and trees, as the Indians used to do with them; to which end about twenty divided themselves into several small parties: Soon after as they were looking for the enemy, a party of ours espied 3 of the Indians, some gathering corn in the field, while the rest of them were busied in heating of an oven to bake some of the fruit which they also gathered in the same field. The English were at such a distance that they could not make any sign to their comrades, without being discovered by the Indians in the field ; wherefore two of them crept as near as they could to the house, at one end of the field where they suddenly rushed upon two of the wretches, and knocked them down with the butt end of their muskets, which was not done so silently, but the other three in the field took the alarm and fled away, who might else as easily as the other two have been surprized.

These outrages thus daily committed, filled all the plantations about Piscataqua with fear and confusion ; scarce any place where there was not reason for some to complain either of the loss of their friends, or burning of their houses ; which caused most of them that lived scatteringly, at any distance from neighbours, either to garrison their houses, or else to desert their own dwellings, and to repair to their next neighbours that were better fortified than themselves ; but all the inhabitants in parts in general were alarmed to stand upon their guard.

On the 7th of October following, being a day of public humiliation, a man was shot down as he was riding between two garrison houses about Newechewannick, and died of his wounds two months after ; about the same instant of time two young men were shot dead about a mile from that place; these two had their arms or guns with them, which were carried away by those who killed them; together with their upper garments: It is not said that these three last (though killed upon a day of humiliation) were surprized in their repairing to, or returning from the place of public worship, which would in a great measure have abated the sorrow of their sad funerals, if when they were suddenly arrested by the harbingers of death, they had been found so doing. Soon after this they assaulted another house at Oyster river, notwithstanding it was garrisoned, and meeting with a good old man, whose name was Beard, without the garrison, they killed him upon the place, and in a barbarous manner cut off his head, and set it upon a pole in derision. Not far off about the same time they burnt another house and barn.

Upon the 16th of October, being Saturday, about an 100 of the Indians were gathered together to assault Newichewannick; they began with one named Tozer, half a mile from the upper garrison, at Salmon Falls: The said Tozer was presently killed, his son taken captive (but returned after some months restraint) several guns being shot at this assault; alarmed Lieut. Plaisted, at the next garrison, who like a man of a public spirit, immediately sent out 7 men from the garrison under his command, to see what the matter was, but being met by an ambush laid in the way as they went, lost 2 or 3 of the company, the rest hardly escaping back to the place from whence they came; whereupon the said Lieut. Plaisted immediately dispatched away a messenger to Major Waldern, at Quechecho, which because it seems to be the last time that ever that good and useful man set pen to paper, the letter shall be here inserted.

“ Salmon Falls, Oct. ber 16th, 1675.”

Mr. Richard Waldern and Lieut. Coffin, these are to inform you, that just now the Indians are engaging us with at least an hundred men, and have slain four of our men already Richard Tozer, James Barny, Isaac Bottes, and Tozer's son, and burnt Benoni Hodsdan's house: Sirs, if ever you have any love for us and the country, now shew yourselves with men to help us, or else we are all in great danger to be slain, unless our God wonderfully appears for our deliverance: They that cannot fight let them pray: nothing else, but I rest,

Yours to serve you,

ROGER PLAISTER,

GEORGE BROUGHTON.”

What answer was returned to the important and pathetic letter is not fully known at present; most probably he that was most concerned in the contents of it was either absent from home, or in no capacity to send the relief desired, which if it could have been had, might have prevented the said mischief that fell out the next day; when Lieut. Plaisted being more earnestly bent to perform that last office of love to his deceased friends, whom he could not by all his endeavours save from the danger of death, while they were in the land of the living, would needs venture himself with 20 soldiers out of his garrison, to fetch off the dead bodies.

To that end he ordered a pair of oxen to be yoked to bring them to his garrison, in order to their christian burial, not considering that the Indians lay skulking thereabouts, waiting for such opportunities. They went first to the furiherest place, where they found R. Tozer's body, and put it in the cart, but coming back to take up the other two bodies which were fallen in a little swamp nearer to the garrison, they were set upon by 150 of the enemy, who had hid themselves in the bushes, and under a stone wall, and logs in the way as they were to pass; by the sudden noise of the guns the cattle being frightened, ran away to the garrison with such of the dead as were first laid thereon (and possibly with one of them wounded at that instant), leaving their owners to fight it out with the enemy. Lieut. Plaisted being thus desperately assaulted, he with his 20 men was forced to retreat to a place of better advantage; but being there so warmly pursued, they were not able to abide it long, although they killed and mortally wounded several of the Indians, as themselves have since confessed; but they most of them being so much over matched, took the opportunity of a fair retreat and so got safe to their garrisons, while Lieut. Plaisted out of the height of his courage, disdaining either to fly from or yield himself (for, tis said the Indians were loth to kill him, but desirous rather to take him prisoner) into the hands of such cursed castiffs, did fight it out desperately, till he was slain upon the place; his eldest son and another man were slain in their two late retreat, and his other son was sorely wounded, so that he died within a few weeks after.

The Indians were contented with the mischief for the present and slunk away into the woods before the next day, when Captain Frost came up from Sturgeon Creek, a few miles below the river, with a party of his friends and buried the dead. During these onsets the enemy also took the advantage to burn three houses and two barns before they left the place.

The latter end of the same month they burnt a mill near the same place belonging to Mr. Hutchinson, a merchant of Boston; from whence they came down toward Sturgeon Creek, where they burnt one house and killed two men not far from Captain Frost's dwelling, he escaping himself very narrowly, being shot at by the enemy, about ten in number, who might easily have burnt his house and taken all that was in it, being but three boys besides, himself, had he not used this policy, to call out to some to march this, and the other way, to look after the Indians, as if he had many at hand to command, which under God was the means of his escape; for his house was neither fortified, nor well manned, although far from neighbors.

The next day the said Indians passed down the river on Kittery side, killed one man, whose house they first plundered, and then set it on fire; all this was done just over against Portsmouth, from whence out of a small battery was discharged a piece of ordnance, which by a good Providence was directed so to fling its shot, as it fell very near a party of the Indians, for they were so affrighted therewith (if none of them were killed) that they lost a good part of their plunder near the place. They were pursued by some of the English before they could recover their home, and by the help of the snow that fell about that time, were traced till they were overtaken, but being near a swamp escaped, thro' haste leaving two of their packs behind.

Soon after, they went up the river again to Quechecho, where they burnt a house and two or three barns. Another party of them got over or beyond the other branches of Piscataqua river, towards Exeter, and Lampney Eele river, where they killed one man. Many of them were in the woods about Exeter, and between Hampton and Exeter, where they killed one or two men in the woods as they were travelling.

homewards, occasioning the people of those towns to stand continually upon their guard which proved a great annoyance to the inhabitants.

But let us look a little back to the plantations more eastward from Piscataqua river, where these outrages of the Indians first began.

At Casco Bay, Lieut. Ingerson's son with another man, going out a fowling about this time, were both killed before they returned home, his father's houses being burnt, with many others also thereabouts.

At Black Point, Lieut. Augur with two more were assaulted by the Indians, where after many shot exchanged betwixt them, himself was so wounded, that he died soon after, and his brother also was killed within a few days after, not far from the same place.

When the rising of the Indians first began in those eastern parts (with us called the county of Yorkshire) Capt. Wincol of Neweche-wannick, with some others, having a sympathy for the sufferings of his neighbors, marched up that way with a small party of men. In his first skirmish with the enemy he chanced to lose two or three of his company; the rest not being above 11 in all, as they were marching along by the sea side were assaulted by a great number of the Indians, judged to be 150; being hard beset with so great a number, they retreated to an heap of bolts that lay near the water side, by the shelter of which they lay safe from the enemy's guns, and so well played their few guns, that they slew many of the Indians, and put them all to a kind of rout at last; after which, by the help of an old canoe they recovered safe to the other side of the bank. But nine Saco men had worse success who came with a good intent to help their friends, upon the hearing of their guns; but as they came to rescue Capt. Wincol with his small party, they themselves fell into an ambush of the enemy and so were all cut off, with two other men also, near the place which the first skirmish was, for the Indians from the shore side could discern any that were coming towards them when they were at a great distance, and so might easily way-lay them before they could come up to them. Near upon seven houses were burnt about this time, and some persons killed at Black Point.

Two persons were killed at Wells in the beginning of winter one of them was a servant to Mr. William Symonds (one of the principal men in the town aforesaid) the gentleman himself with his family were removed to a garrison house in the middle of the town. His servant going early in the morning to look after some business there, tarried longer than was needful to provide something for himself, the Indians invited themselves to breakfast with him, making the poor fellow pay the shot, when they had done with the loss of his life.

A week after one Cross was slain at Wells likewise, who was a kind of a distracted fellow. Also one Isaac Cousins was there killed in the beginning of winter, after there had been some overtures of peace between Major Waldern and the Indians.

With such kind of mutual encounters was the latter part of the year spent betwixt the Indians and the English from Piscataqua river to Kennebeck, from the beginning of August to the end of November wherein many were slain on both sides; of the English in those parts were slain upwards of fifty; the enemy lost, as appeared afterwards by their own confession, above 90, partly in the afore-said skirmishes, and partly in their joining with the Indians to the westward, whither it is said, many of them were invited to repair, to help destroy the English, in hopes to enjoy their possessions afterwards; but God had otherwise determined, who did arise at last to save the meek ones of the earth, and plead the cause of his people.

The Governor and Council of Massachusetts had at this time their hands full with the like attempts of Philip and his accomplices at the westward, yet were not unmindful of the deplorable condition of these eastern plantations; having committed the care thereof to the Majors of the respective regiments of the several counties on that side of the country but more especially to the care and prudence of the Honorable Major D. Dennison, Major General of the colony, a gentleman who by his great insight in, and long experience of all martial affairs, was every way accomplished for the managing that whole affair; he had, to ease the other side of the country, drawn out a sufficient number of soldiers from the next counties, to have reduced all the Indians eastward to their obedience; but just as they were intended to march up to the headquarters of the Indians, to fall upon them there, viz. to Ossagey and Pigwauchet, about an hundred miles up into the country northward, the winter setting in so sharp and severe in the beginning of December, and latter end of November, it was not possible to have marched a day's journey into the woods without hazarding all their lives that should venture up, the snow being found generally in those woods four foot thick on the tenth of December, so as it was not possible for any to have travelled that way unless they carried rackets under their feet, wherewith to walk upon the snow: This only consideration forced them to lay aside their design for the present, but soon after it was done to their hands; for the depth of the snow, and sharpness of the cold, were so extreme, that the Indians in those parts were so pinched therewith, that being starved they began to sue for peace, making their address first to Major Waldernon that, account by whose mediations that whole body of Indians eastward were brought to an hopeful conclusion of peace, which was mutually agreed upon and possibly might have remained firm enough to this day, had there not been too just an occasion given for the breaking of the same, by the wicked practice of some lewd persons which opened the door, and made way for the bringing in all those sad calamities and mischiefs that have since fallen upon those parts of the country, as shall hereafter be declared.

In the latter end of June, 1676, the Indians that had made a general conspiracy against the English, were strangely dispersed and disappointed, so that from that time began to separate one from another, and every nation of them to shift for themselves, as hath already been mentioned in the former part of this narrative. Canonicus, the great Sachem of the Narrhagansets, distrustful the proffers of the English, was slain in the woods by the Mohawks, his Squaw surrendering herself, by this means her life was spared.

Many of those about Lancaster, and the places adjoining thereto, did cunningly endeavour to hide themselves amongst those Indians about Piscataqua, that Major Waldern's means and concluded a peace, yet could neither dissimble their nature and disposition past before from suspicion of mischief, nor yet so artfully conceal their persons, but they were easily discerned by such as in former times had any acquaintance with the eastern Indians by way of trade, or other converse : Whereupon the forces newly raised in the Massachusetts under the command of Capt William Hathorne and Capt. Joseph Still, designed for the subduing those Indians about the river of Merrimack and Piscataqua, that still stood out in hostility against the English meeting with those under the command of Major Waldern aforesaid and Capt. Frost of Kittery ; it was mutually agreed betwixt those several commanders to seize upon all those Indians that at that time were met together about Major Waldern's dwelling at Quechecho ; the design succeeded according to expectation, and all the Indians were handsomely surprized the 6th of September 1676 without the loss of any persons life, either Indian or English, to the number of near 400 ; by which device, after our forces had them all in their hands, they separated the peaceable from the perfidious, that had been our enemies during the late troubles ; finding above 200 involved in the former rebellion more or less, they accordingly were sent down to the Governor and Council at Boston, who adjudged 7 or 8 of them immediately to die ; such as were known to have had their hands in the blood of the English, or that had been shed by their means ; the rest that were found only accessaries to the late mischiefs, had their lives spared but were sent into other parts of the world to try the difference between the friendship of their neighbors here, and their service with other masters elsewhere.

Those who had been always peaceable and true to the English, never intermeddling in the quarrel, as Wannalancet, the Sagamore of Pennicook, and some others, were quietly dismissed to their own places. Besides those that were surprized at the time aforesaid, there were several others who had been the chief actors, that were taken up and down in those woods beyond Merrimack, and so were delivered up to justice; as John Monoco, Sagamore Sam, old Jethro with some others, as hath been already mentioned, yet young Jethro brought in 40 at one time. It was a special favor from God so to order it, that the Indians aforesaid, were so surprized; for had they continued their former rebellion, and had taken the opportunity to have joined with the eastern Indians, as some of them did a few months before, they would in all likelihood have utterly destroyed all the plantations of the English beyond Piscataqua river as manifestly appears by the mischief that was lately done by means of a few, that by too much connivance of some in those parts that entertained a better opinion of them than it seems they deserved. For whereas mention was formerly made of a small party of Indians, that on the 3d day of May, in this present year, had murdered one Thomas Kembel, of Bradford, and carried away his wife and five children captive; yet two or three of the actors did, upon what consideration is not known, return the woman and children again within six weeks, and because of their voluntariness returning of them were dealt more favorable with; being only put into prison at dover, for a time; yet possibly conceiving that a prison was but a preparation for a worse evil, they took an opportunity (two of the chief actors in the aforesaid mischief, one called Simon, the other Andrew) to convey themselves out of the place of restraint, and afterwards going amongst the Amosoggan and Kennebeck Indians, have joined with them in those bloody and cruel depredations lately made in those parts, which follow in order next to be related.

Some little color or pretence of injury was alledged before those eastern Indians began their outrage, both in the former, as well as in the present year; the chief actor or rather the beginner of all the aforesaid mischiefs eastward, is one Squando, the Sagamore of Saco Indians, whose squaw, as is said, was abused by a rude and indiscreet act of some English seaman, the last summer, 1675, who either overset the canoe wherein the said squaw with her child were sailing in a river thereabouts, or else to try whether the children of the Indians, as they had heard, could swim as naturally as any other creatures, wittingly cast her child into the water; but the squaw immediately diving into the water after it, fetched it up from the bottom of the river, yet it falling; out within a while after the said child died (which it might have done if no such affront had been offered) the said Squando, father of the child, hath been so provoked thereto that he hath ever since set himself to do all the mischief he can to the English in those parts, and was never as yet, since that time, truly willing to be reconciled, although he is said to have sent home some that were taken captive the last year. Surely if their hearts had not been secretly filled with malice and revenge before they might have obtained satisfaction for the wrong done at an easier rate: more probable it is that this was only an occasion to vent this mischief they had formerly conceived in their hearts.

There is an injury of a higher nature, mentioned as the ground of their quarrel with us who live about Pemmaquid, which happened the last spring, viz. one Laughton, with another person or more, who having obtained under the hand of Major Waldern, a warrant to seize any Indians eastward that had been guilty of any murder or spoil done to the English in those parts, did (most perfidiously and wickedly entice some of the Indians about Cape Sables, who never had been in the least manner guilty of any injury done to the English) on board their vessel, or else some other way, and then carried them away to sell them for slaves; which the Indians in those parts look upon as an injury done to themselves, and have alleged it to the inhabitants of Pemmaquid, as one of the principal grounds of their present quarrel : The thing alledged is too true as to matter of fact; and the persons that did it were lately committed to prison in order to their further trial. Yet all those Indians do, or may know full well, that they who did them that wrong, were liable to due punishment (or else their quarrel might be accounted just, and they considered as Indians, must have the more allowance) if they could be found, nor ever were any countenanced amongst us, that had done them any kind of injury; nor did those that take upon them the revenging of the injury, know that they were inhabitants of this country that did the wrong; nor was there ever any orderly complaint made thereof; but this cannot excuse their perfidiousness and cruelty. Some other pretences alledged by the said Indians that yet do bear no proportion to the mention of a wrong or injury, viz: because our traders were forbidden to sell any ammunition to any Indians whatsoever; which those Indians say they cannot live without; yet seeing they themselves, as the westward Indians have so ill improved that which they had before, there was little reason why they should quarrel with us for selling no more.

Further also, it is affirmed by some persons worthy of credit, that for divers years past have lived in those parts, that the Indians thereabouts need not have wanted powder or shot, only they wanted something wherewith to cloak their malicious and barbarous practices of late committed against us; but there being different opinions about this point, we shall leave it for the present. But this being premised in reference to the pretended ground or occasion of the quarrel it remains that the effect thereof be now related.

Before the war with Phillip was well ended to the southward, there was a fresh alarm sounded again to the eastward; for on the 11th of August, 1676, the very day before Philip's heart that had harboured so many mischievous and treacherous devices against the English, was by one of his own company shot through, a party of Indians began their outrages at Casco in a most perfidious and treacherous manner, killing and carrying away captive, to the number of 30 persons, and burning their houses: amongst whom was the family of one Anthony Brackett, an inhabitant of Casco, who was thought to have been killed, but he himself, with his wife, and one of his five children carried away captive, with a negro, did happily make an escape from their bloody and deceitful hands, in November next ensuing.

The manner how Anthony Brackett and his wife made their escape was very remarkable and therefore judged worthy to be here inserted, although out of due place. The Indians that led them captive having brought them to the north side of Casco Bay, news was brought to the said Indians of the surprizal of Arowick, house in Kennebeck, with all the stores therein, which did forejoyce them, that they made all haste to share in the good things there to be had: Thus eager to be gone, they promised Bracket & his wife that they also should have a share therein if they would haste after them, bring along a burthen allotted to each of them: The woman having a little before observed an old birch canoe lying at the water side, hoped it was an opportunity Providence offered for their escape; whereupon she first prudently asked the Indians to let the negro, their own servant (at the same time carried captive by them) help them to carry their burthens, which was granted; then she begged them a piece or two of meat, which was not denied them. Thus being furnished with help and provision, the Indians leaving them behind to come after with their several burthens, and a young child they could not but look upon it as a nutrus Divinus, to bid them shift for themselves: The woman also found a needle and thread in the house, with which she mended the canoe, while they tarried on that side of the bay, in which they soon ventured to get away which prosperously succeeded: for in that old canoe they crossed a water eight or nine miles broad, and when they came on the south side of the bay, they might have been in as much danger of other Indians, that had lately been about Black Point, and had taken it; but they were newly gone. So things on all sides thus concurring to help forward their deliverance, they came safely to the seat at Black Point, where also by special Providence they met with a vessel bound for Piscataqua, that came into that harbour but a few hours before they came thither, by which means they arrived safe in Piscataqua river soon after; all which circumstances are very worthy to be noted.

Amongst those Indians that seized this Bracket's family, the Chief was one Simon, who had but a little before escaped out of Dover prison, where he was not carefully overlooked; he had had his hand in the murder of sundry English, as he had confessed; not missing any, save one, on whom he had discharged his gun; but because he came in voluntarily, bringing in a woman and 5 children of the English, who had been carried captive a little before, it was questioned whether his last act of submission might not balance his former transgression, and therefore he was committed to that, not so secure a prison, till his case might be further considered of. It is said that coming to that Bracket's house overnight, he pulled forth a counterfeited pass under the hands of some public officers, or men intrusted with that service, making shew of all friendship; but in the morning, or soon after, he pulled off the vizor of a friend, and discovered what he was; yet granting life to this person and his family, that did not, or could not resist, which he denied to some of the neighbours not far off, who were many of them killed by this bloody villain and his partners.

There are some circumstances in the assault of Anthony Bracket's house very considerable, which, because it was the first outrage committed by the Indians in the second insurrection, 1676, are worthy of a more particular remembering.

This indian beforementioned, called Simon, after he had escaped out of the prison at Dover came to Casco, and either in the end of July or beginning of August, acquainted himself with this Anthony Bracket, and oft frequented his house. Upon the 9th of August some of the Indians having killed a cow of his, the Indian Simon coming to his house promised to bring the Indians to him that had killed his cow. In the mean time they of the place sent two men to Major Waldern's at Dover, to complain of this injury done by the Indians, but before their return, very early in the morning on the 11th of August, Simon with a party of Indians came to Anthony Bracket's house, and told him there were the Indians that had killed his cow ; but as soon as they had said that, the Indians went further into his house and took hold of all the guns they could see : Bracket asked what was the meaning of that, Simon replied, that so it must be, asking him withal, whether he had rather serve the Indians, or be slain by them to which he answered, that if the case were so, he would rather chuse to serve them than be killed by them : Simon replied, that then they must be bound which was presently done. The said Bracket his wife, and a negro were all bound by the Indians ; his wife had a brother, who offering to resist was killed forthwith, the rest, with five children were led away prisoners.

Two hours after one Pike, that lived not far off, but knowing nothing of all this, went up in a canoe toward one Robert Corban's house where he found one Humphry Durham and Benjamin Atwel at work about their hay ; after a little stay he left them, intending to go up higher with his canoe, but as soon as he was a little past, he heard the report of guns which made him with another man he had with him, presently return back ; before he came beyond Corban's house he saw an English boy running with all haste which made him fear some mischief was in hand, and presently a volley of shot came against them, but the bullets flying over their heads, did them no hurt ; presently Simon appeared, and called them to come on shore ; but they liked not his courtesy, and turning their canoe into the stream, got out of the reach of their guns, hastening down to his own house with all speed ; when he came near to his house, he called to the people to make haste away towards the garrison house, and bid the rest look to themselves, and fire upon the Indians that were coming against them: In the mean while the Indians passing from Anthony Bracket's to Corban's, killed Corban himself, together with Humphry Durham and Benjamin Atwel beforementioned; then passing on to other houses, killed some, and carried others away captive. At one of the next houses the women and children got off into the water by a canoe; but one James Ross his wife and children were carried away. Corban's wife, with one of the other men's wives, and the children of another, they carried away likewise.

In another side of the town as three persons were going to reap at Anthony Bracket's, passing from an house where they left their canoe met with John Mountjoy and one Wakely, to whom they told what had happened soon after they heard two guns fired, whereby it seems two men were killed: wherefore coming back toward Thomas Bracket's, where they had left their canoe, they saw him shot down by the Indians; one of the three not so well able to run, hid himself in the bushes in hopes to make his escape more conveniently afterwards, which accordingly he did; but in the mean time he saw the Indians carry away Thomas Bracket's wife and children. Soon after the three men aforesaid got safe to Mr. Mountjoy's garrison, but not trussing to the security of that garrison, they soon after repaired to an island in the bay, called James Andrew's island. One George Lewis and his wife tarried all this time in their house till the next day, when they had opportunity to get safe to the island aforesaid, together with the two men that were now returned from Major Waldern ; whither they had been sent but too late, to make complaint of the Indians that had counterfeited his pass to travel into those parts, and had done this mischief.

The day after, one George Felt, suspecting the worst by reason of a smoke he saw on the opposite side of the town, took his wife and children in a canoe to see what the matter was, but when he came near a point of land not far off, he found several of his neighbors goods, which made him conclude their owners were killed, which was a sufficient warning to him likewise to fly for his life, which he did to the same island. After a number of them had escaped thither, they recollected that they had left powder behind them in one or two places ; whereupon they determined to venture a party of them in the night, to prevent the Indians from having any advantage thereby, & for their own defence if occasion should require ; accordingly their attempt succeeded well, for they brought away a barrel of powder from one Well's house, and likewise a considerable quantity out of a chest in a store house, where the Indians had been ransacking, and had taken things out of the other end of the chest, yet overlooked the powder. In this surprizal of the plantation in Casco.

Bay, called Falmouth, there were 34 persons killed and carried into captivity.

That this was not a casual attempt, but a designed plot, will appear, in that just about the same time, the Indians at Kennebeck made the like insurrection, whereby it is concluded, either that the Indians which escaped from Dover stirred them up thereunto, that the said Indians finding them in a disposition tending that way, by reason of some injuries done those that dwell farther northward, they offered their service to help forward the design.

It is to be noted here that the Indians about Kennebeck were persuaded to continue their former amity with the English, notwithstanding the report of Philip's rising that year before, and the outrages committed the last autumn and winter following; yet which is more, they had lately renewed their league with the English in those parts, although they had often complained to those of Pembaquid, of the injury they suffered in the withholding from them the trade of powder and shot, without which they said they could not subsist and for want of which, it is alledged by themselves, that some of them perished the last winter.

But the quarrel of late fallen out betwixt the English and the Indians about Kennebeck and eastward thereof, being a matter of great importance, it shall, for the satisfaction of the reader, in what follows be more particularly described, it being the duty of every one that published things of this nature, to do the right of an historian to all who are any ways concerned in what is made public. The information was received from a prudent person, and eye and ear witness of all that happened amongst the said Indians both the former and present year, and one that was more publicly concerned in those transactions than some others, therefore the more credit may be given thereto.

Mention is already made of what happened in September, 1675, to the company belonging to a sloop and two boats that went up Calico Bay to gather corn, upon that accident it is said divers Indians on the east side of Kennebeck river repaired to their fort at Totonnock (a place higher up into the country beyond Kennebeck and Sheepscot river) where was an English trading house: And the Indians eastward of said river, had as yet done no harm to any of the English, yet did Capt. Sylvanus Davis, agent for Major Clarke and Capt. Lake of Boston, upon these overtures think fit to fetch down the powder and shot, with other goods from the said trading house, telling the Indians, by the messenger sent up, he would have them come down and live below in that river to take off jealousies and that he would then supply them with what was needful.— But the messenger told them in case they would not come down and deliver up their arms the English would kill them. He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool, saith Solomon, cutteth off the feet, and drinketh damage. This message delivered by him as he afterwards confessed, but who put into his mouth, or whether it was the device of his own heart does not at present concern us to enquire, but the damage that side of the country had sustained thereby is not easy to recount; for upon this threatening message the Indians forsook their fort and went further eastward and sent to John's river and to the sea side, to get all the Indians they could together to come up Penobscot river.

A gentleman who at that time lived at Pem-maquid, a kind of superintendant over the affairs of that place considering the sad state things were running into, labored to obtain a parly with the said Indians, or with some of them, which after much trouble and cost he did accomplish. But in the mean time, such was the violence used by some refractory
English in those parts, that they could scarce be restrained from offering violence to the persons he sent up as messengers or others that lived quietly amongst them, and did also as violently set themselves up to oppose him or any others that acted with more moderation than the rest; protesting against them as those who for gain supplied the Indians with powder and shot, and said they would kill any

Indian they met ; others at Monhiggon offered five pounds for every Indian that should be brought, yet would not these persons that were so violent against the Indians in their discourse, be persuaded then or afterwards to fight the Indians in an orderly way, as appeared both by their security in not acting better upon their guard, and by their sudden flight afterwards, running away like a flock of sheep at the barking of any little dog. Things being in posture, what could be expected but a present war with the Indians, although as it seems there were few or none to be found willing to manage it in those parts. However, the person aforesaid understanding the general court at Boston had appointed a council of war at Kennebeck, applied himself to them, laying before them the desperate state the things were falling into ; whereupon they issued out warrants to restrain all manner of persons from meddling with the Indians without further order, which within a few days should be had.— In the mean time the Sahems of the Indians met at Pemmaquid, where after many complaints made of the hard dealing of the English in Kennebeck river, they came to terms of peace, promising to keep true friendship with the English, and to hinder the Amoscoggan Indians from meddling with the English, if by any means they could, and also to return peaceably in the spring of the year. This gentleman aforesaid, having a long time waited to go to Boston, was willing to take the opportunity of the present winter, hoping things were now pretty well settled in those parts between the Indians and the English, found soon after that he was cited thither to answer some complaints, though ill grounded, for selling powder and shot to the Indians contrary to order. But those false opinions being easily blown away by his appearance at Boston, and having dispatched his business there, he returned before the winter was over to Pemmaquid, where hearing of a vessel that intended to take Indians in those parts and carry them away to market, which he had many strong reasons to believe, (it being no hard matter to surprize many such, that suspecting no fraud, would easily be enticed aboard a vessel to trade, or may be to drink liquor) sent to both the master and the company, if they had any such intent, to forbear, seeing those Indians were at peace with us; and likewise to the Indians, to inform them of such a vessel, and to be aware thereof; but yet it seems the master and company took several Indians eastward, who were also at peace with us, and to our great sorrow shipped them on board for a market.

The winter being now over, the aforementioned agent of Pemmaquid went to a meeting of the Indians eastward, to persuade them of the country's willingness to continue a peace with them. They seemed very joyful thereat, and in the spring brought some presents to confirm the peace, and to that end also delivered up an English captive boy to those of Kennebeck. But when the summer came on, the said Indians having liberty to visit their friends as they used to do, they missed many of them; who had in the winter been perfidiously carried away, and as is related, they fell into a rage against the English, making complaint thereof to the said agent, Mr.Carthy, Mr. Richard Oliver, and others. They were told means should be used for bringing them back again; which had been so transported. Those to whom the compliment was made, did scarce believe it to be true, not having heard thereof from any other hand and probably hoping none especially after such solemn warning, would deal so perfidiously with heathens, to lay such a stumbling block before them.

The Indians being certain of the thing done could not be easily pacified, being likewise incensed against the English for withholding the trade of powder and shot the last winter, saying they were frighted from their corn the last year by the people about Kennebeck, in so much that many of them died in the following winter for want of powder and wherewith to kill venison and fowl; adding withal, that if the English were their friends as they would not suffer them to die for want thereof. However, the said agent making the best he could of a bad cause, used all means to pacify the complainants, and to that end promised them that if they would meet with any of the Amoscoggan Indians (who had all along the bitterest enmity against the English) he would give them a meeting to treat in order to a peace, Major Waldern having already concluded a peace with the Piscataqua and Casco Indians, and by that means, if they could conclude the like peace with the Amoscoggan men (that could not yet be found) there would be a general peace with all the Indians eastward of Piscataqua, which the Indians that were present at this discourse seemed very joyful at. Yet still by one fatal accident or another, jealousies still seemed to increase in their minds, or else the former injuries began to boil a fresh in their spirits, and not being easily digested, whatever had been said or done to allay the offensiveness thereof. Soon after comes a post from Totonnock, to desire him to repair thither according to his promise, where they told him he should meet Squando, and divers Amoscoggan Sachems, and that Mug was sent post to fetch the said Squando. This gentleman mindful of his promise, went with the post to Kennebeck, finding Capt. Lake at his house in Arowsick. It was judged meet that Captain Sylvester Davis should go with him, with instructions from the council then sitting in Kennebeck, how to carry on their treaty. After they had gone part of the way towards Totonock, they came to an English house, where they were told that great jealousies of deceit in the Indians were upon their spirits, from what they had heard of Mug, and Tarumkin, an Amoscoggan Sachem. Going further, to a place called Kezonucook, they met with Indians, who were very shy of telling them any thing; which, added to their former imitation greatly increased their fears; but being resolved on their voyage, they proceeded in their way thither, yet falling short of the place on purpose, that they might finish their business with them the next day. When they came to their fort, they were saluted with a volley of shot, then brought into a wigwam where their Sachems were: Madockawando sat as a chief, who now styles himself their minister. Being set in council, they made Affiminsqua their speaker, whose adopted son was the said Madockawando: He told them it was not their custom, if any came as messengers to treat with them, to seize upon their persons, as sometimes the Mohawks did with such as had been sent to them; Capt. Davis, and the other gentleman told them therein they dealt like men: answer was presently made them, you did otherwise by our men, when 14 came to treat with you, and set a guard over them, and took away their guns; and not only so, but a second time you required our guns, and demanded us to come down unto you, or else you would kill us, which was the cause of our leaving both our fort and corn to our great loss.

It was without doubt no small trouble to their minds, in a treaty with these Pagans, hæc diei potuisse, and non potuisse refelli: Yet to put the best construction might be, on such irregular actions, which could not well be justified; they told them the persons who had so done, were not within the limits of their government, and therefore though they could not call them to an account for so acting, yet they did utterly disallow thereof; adding further, as soon as we understood thereof, we sent for you to Pemsaguid, and treated you kindly, and kept you, as you know, from the violence of the English; the Indians replied, we do but inform you, and will treat farther in the afternoon; but when the afternoon came, our two messengers told them their business was to treat with the Amoscoggan Sachems, and that they were sorry Squando was not there; then having confirmed peace with those eastward Indians they intreated the Amoscoggan men to speak, who likewise urged Tarumkin, the chief Amoscoggan Sachem to speak, who after some pause said, he had been to the westward, where he had found many Indians unwilling for peace; but says he, I found three Sachems (whom he named though these he spake to knew them not) willing to have peace; and for my own part I am willing for peace, and gave them his hand with protestation of his continuing in friendship ; so did 7 or 8 more of the Amoscoggan men ; whose names they took, of whom Mug and Robinhood's son were two. After this Maddockawando asked them what they should do for powder and shot, when they had eat up their Indian corn, what they should do for the winter, for their hunting voyages ; asking withal, whether they would have them die, or leave their country, and go all over to the French. Our messengers told him, they would do what they could with the Governor, some might be allowed them for necessity : He said they had waited long already, and therefore would have them now, say yea or nay, whether they should have powder as formerly, or not : Our messengers then replied, you yourselves say many of the western Indians would not have peace, and therefore if we sell you powder, and you give it to the western men, what do we but cut our own throats ? Adding further, it is not in our power without leave, if you should wait ten years more, to let you have powder, at which words they seemed much to be offended.

But yet the next day they resolved to go down with them and speak with the western men, thereby, if it might be to stop their further proceeding.

So going down with them the next day, they met with some Indians who had got strong liquor with whom they fell a drinking ; our messengers stayed at two places for them, and finding that still they tarried behind, not knowing what farther to do, they went home, it being the sixth day of the week; but the next night save one, news came to Kennebeck, that the Indians had killed divers English in Casco, although it was not yet known at Pemmaquid: Upon this news Capt. Davis set out one sentinel the next night; the rest (such was their security) went all to bed, and in the morning were all like Laish surprised; thus might it be said Invadunt Æden somno (sinon) vinoq; sepultam. The particulars of the surprizing of Kennebeck, and Arowsick house, are thus related by such as were acquainted therewith.

Upon the 13th of August, 1676, several Indians repaired in the evening to the house of Mr. Hammond, an ancient inhabitant, and trader with the Indians up Kennebeck river; his daughter, or a maid that was servant in the house, either naturally afraid of the natives, or else from something she observed in their countenance or carriage, manifested so much fear, as made her run out of the house to hide herself in some place abroad; the Indians perceiving it, the more to dissemble their treachery, ran after her, and brought her into the house, telling her (although they could not persuade her to believe) that there was no reason to be afraid of them; presently after more of the barbarous villains coming into the house, she grew more afraid than before, being now more strongly persuaded, that they came on purpose to kill or surprize those in the family, whereupon she suddenly made an escape out the house, and presently passed into a field of Indian corn, whereby she might the better avoid the danger of any pursuer, and so ran across over the land that night, ten or twelve miles, to give them notice that lived at Sheepscot river; it is said that after she got out, she heard a noise in the house, as if they were fighting or scuffling within doors; but she did not count it wisdom to go back and see what the matter was, knowing before enough of their villanies, how well soever her mistress (that was more versed in the trade of the Indians) might think of them. Those of Sheepscot taking this warning, escaped away as soon as they could, leaving their cattle and dwellings as a prey to the Indians. What befel master Hammond and his family, is not yet certainly known: Reports pass up and down, that some who came down the river afterwards, saw some of the dead stripped upon the banks of the river, which make us fear the worst concerning all the rest; for certainly the whole family, 16 in number, were all at that time either killed or carried away captive, none save the maid aforesaid being known to make an escape, to inform their friends, like Job's messengers, what befel the rest of the family.

The Indians having in this manner surprized Mr. Hammond's house, they passed down the river the same night but going by another house, they meddled not with the people, only turned their canoes adrift, that they might not find means afterwards to escape themselves, or help others so to do : Possibly their chief aiming at Arowick house, they would not for fear of being discovered make any attempt upon any place near by ; wherefore, the 14th of August, very early in the morning, having in the night, or before break of day, passed over on to the island called Arowick ; several of them undiscovered lay hid under the walls of the fort, and behind a great rock near adjoining, till the sentinel was gone of from his place (who went off it seems sooner than he should, considering the danger) when presently some Indians followed him in at the fort gate (as some report) while others of them immediately seized the port holes thereof and shot down all they saw passing up and down within the walls and so in a little time became master of the fort, and all that was within it : Capt. Lake joint owner with Major Clarke of the whole island hearing the bustle that was below, betwixt the Indians and those that belonged to the place, was strangely surprized, yet himself with Capt. Sylvanus Davis and two more, understanding that the Indians had seized the fort, and killed divers of the English, apprehending in bootless, or rather heartless to stay as not being able to stand upon their guard or make any resistance, made a shift to find a passage out at a back door, whereby they escaped to the water side, where they found a canoe, into which they all entered, and made away toward another island near by : This was not done so secretly but the Indians discerned them before they were gone far ; four of them therefore hastened after those that had escaped in another canoe, and coming within shot discharged their guns upon them, whereby said Davis was badly wounded ; yet making haste, as they generally used to do that fly for their lives, timor addidit alas, they got a shore before the Indians overtook them ; it is said they were strangely dispirited, or else they might easily have defended themselves against their pursuers : But when once mens hearts are sunk with fear and discouragement upon a sudden surprisal, it is hard to buoy them up, to make any resistance. Capt. Davis being badly wounded, could neither trust to his legs to fly, nor yet make use of his hands, to fight, yet was strangely preserved : Providence directing him to go into the cleft of a rock, near by the place where he first landed ; the Indians by the glittering of the sun beams in their eyes as they came ashore, did not discern him ; so that lying hid under the covert of the hand of Providence for two days, he at last crawled a little above the water side, till he found a canoe, whereby he escape with his life. The other two were better foot men, and parting with Capt. Lake, made their escape ten or twelve miles, to the farther end of the island, and so escaped from the Indians, till they found means to get off. Poor Capt. Lake who a few hours before slept quietly in his mansion house, surrounded with a strong fortification, defended with many soldiers, is now forced to fly away with none to attend him; and as the awful hand of Providence ordered things, was as some say, pursued by such Indians as were mere strangers to the place, that knew not the master from the man, but by one of whom he was shot down, as is supposed soon after he came ashore. Lieut Davis heard two guns, by which it was thought and soon after was known to be by an Indian, who hath since confessed to Capt. Davis that he shot him that day Arowick was taken, which he intended not to have done, but that he held up his pistol against him; whereas if he had but asked quarter, he should have had his life. Capt. Lake was slain at that time, although many hopes were for some time entertained that was taken alive, and kept with other captives amongst the Indians; and it is said the Indians of those parts did not intend to kill him if they could have helped it; but it was known his hat was seen upon an Indian's head not long after, which made his friends conclude what had befallen that good man, who might emphatically be so termed, in distinction from them that may truly be called just men and no more: For it seems according to the just agreement betwixt himself and his part owner of Arowick island, it was not his turn this year to have been upon the place, but such was his goodness, that he yielded to the desire of his friend and partner, as in his room and stead to take upon himself that service in this time of danger; it is hoped his goodness in future time will not be forgotten by such as were any way concerned therein, or had advantage thereby.

This island (called Arowick, from an Indian so named that formerly possessed it, was and of whom it was purchased by one Mr. Richards, who sold it to Capt. Lake and Major Clarke) lies up ten miles within the mouth of Kennebeck river; it is some miles in length and contains many thousand acres of very good land; where meadow and arable ground are in a good proportion well suited together. Within the fort aforesaid, were many convenient buildings for several officers, as well for wares and trading, as habitation: Six several edifices are said to have been there erected. The warehouse at that time was well furnished with all sorts of goods; besides a mill and other accommodations and dwellings, within a mile of the fort and mansion house; some inhabitants of which hardly made their escape upon the first surprisal of the fort.

All which considered, the loss that befel the proprietors at the surprisal of this island, seems to be very great, valued at many thousands; but those that were the owners, with others of late times, have found from their own experience, what Solomon said of old, there is a time, to get, and a time to lose, a time to keep and a time to cast away; a time to break down as well as a time to build up. The persons killed and taken at Kennebeck, both at Mr. Hammond's and at Arowick, are said to be 153.

Upon the report of this sad disaster, all the plantations of the English in those parts were soon after left, and forsaken by degrees. All the rest of the inhabitants of Kennebeck river, Sheepscot river, Sagadahock, and Damaricotte, fearing to be served in the same kind, fled to the islands of Cape, Bonawagan and Damaril's Cove.

On the second day at night a post was sent to Pemmaquid to inform them of what had happened, who being but eight or ten men, had a mind to go on the island called Monbiggon, having secured the best of their goods, but the wind taking them short, they were forced to turn into Damaril's Cove, where they found Mr. Wiswall, and Mr. Colicot, there they laboured two days to settle a garrison; but thro' the mutinous disposition of the people, and the want of provision, nothing could be done to secure the island, so that it was soon deserted. From thence they went to Monbiggon, resolving there to tarry till they heard from Boston, from whence Mr. Colicot and Mr. Wiswall promised to do their utmost endeavor to send help. There they settled three guards and appointed 25 to watch every night, not knowing but that the Indians might come every hour. But continuing there a fortnight, and finding no relief like to come, and seeing all the country burnt round about, (for after they had got all that could be saved from Pemmaquid, they saw all the other islands, Windgin's Corbin's Sound, New Harbour, and Pemmaquid, all on fire in two hours time) then considering what was best to be done, they found no boats could be sent to sea for fear of weakening the island, and that most of those who were on it were strangers, coasters, and such as came from the main and ready to be gone upon every occasion, they laid an embargo for one week; after which a letter was received from Major Clarke, desiring their assistance for enquiring after Capt. Lake, if alive, saying, what could be had at Kennebeck, &c. but intimating nothing of any help like to come; besides, those that brought the letter told them it was in vain to expect any help from Boston, it being questioned there what they had to do with those parts. Upon which the inhabitants considered, that if they should tarry there and spend all their provision and neither be able to go to sea, nor yet to live; or be safe ashore for want of help, it were better for them to remove while they had something to live upon, and seek employment elsewhere; so by consent they resolved forthwith to transport themselves and what they had saved of their goods, to some place of security, so they failed the first opportunity, some for Piscataqua, some for Boston, and some for Salem, at one of which places they all safely arrived.

Having thus escaped at first, as Lot out of Sodom, but not counting themselves safe in that Zoar, where for a little while they made out to hide their heads, till they might escape to some surer place, there waiting for better times, when they may with peace and quietness return to their former habitations, or seek some other elsewhere.

When the aforesaid exploits were done by the Indians about Casco bay, several of the English removed to Jewel's island, where they hoped to be more secure from the Indians, but the barbarous enemy finding so little resistance made against them on the main land a considerable party of them came with their canoes to destroy that island also about three weeks after the aforementioned mischiefs.

There was a fortified house upon the said island, where the English that either kept upon the island, or repaired thither, hoped to secure themselves. But at the time the Indians assaulted the place many of the English were absent, and few left in the garrison but women and children. Some were gone to other places to fetch Indian corn, others were in a boat employed about fish amongst whom was one Richard Pots with two more. The wife of the said Pots was washing by the water side where she was surprised with her children, and carried away in sight of her husband, who was not a little distressed at that sad spectacle, but was incapable of affording any relief either to his wife or children. One of the little innocents, espying his father in the boat, ran into the water, calling out for help; but an Indian was running after him to catch him up; the poor man, in great agony, being within a gun shot, was about to fire upon the Indian, but fearing he might wound or perhaps kill his child, which the villain had seized and was carrying off, he forbore, chusing rather to have him carried away alive, than expose him to the loss of his life or limbs, by shooting at the Indian.

It is said some of the Indians were killed by those in the garrison; 'tis mentioned that a lad at one shot killed two or three of them; some guns were found afterwards under the fort, which were supposed to have belonged to some of the Indians that were killed. Some that were abroad when the fort was assaulted, desperately broke in through the Indians, whereby at the last many people were preserved.—Some flying away to Jewel's island in a canoe toward Richmond's island, met with a ketch, to which they made known the distress the people were in, thereupon went to the place and took all the people they found there, and carried them off to a place of more safety. Yet there were several persons said to be killed and car-died away at that time, viz. three men, who were known to be killed, two women and two children that are supposed to be yet alive, though in the enemy's power.

From thence they went to Spurwinks, where they assaulted one place, or more, and killed one man, wounded another, and carried another away captive. Amongst those that were in danger of surprizal, one that could not run hid himself in a garden of cabbages, so that he was not found, yet was very near them, for he overheard several questions they asked him they took ; by which means he was the better enabled afterward to prevent the danger two more were coming into, for the poor fellow they had taken, told them that one Gendal and another man were to come that way by and by; whereupon this man that hid himself, meeting Gendal and the other man, gave them notice of the danger, whereby they were delivered out of the snare for that time. Not long after Mr. Gendal fell into their hands and shall hereafter be related. Within a while after or about the same time, another fatal accident befel six or seven persons belonging to Casco : For upon the 23d of September, some persons that belonged to a sloop and a shallop, that were pressed into the service (one reason of which was to prevent their stragling, they being persons that belonged to those parts about Casco) were over desirous to save some of their provision, to which end they first made their address to Capt. Hathorne, (under whom they were ordered to serve) desiring they might be released; the Captain told them he could not do it, but desired them to have patience for a while; they told him they must and would go, else their families would starve at home; the Captain told them further of the danger, and bid them not stir at their peril. However go they would, and soon after went to Mountjoy's island to fetch sheep where they landed seven men; but the Indians suddenly fell upon them, when they betook themselves to the ruins of a stone house, where they defended themselves as long as they could; but at last they were all destroyed either with stones cast in upon them or with the enemies shot, except one who, though at the first it was hoped his wounds were not mortal, yet soon after died thereof. Amongst these was one George Felt, much lamented who had been more active than any man in those parts against the Indians, but at last he lost his own life amongst them, in this too desperate an adventure.

The Indians growing more bold by these attempts in those remote places, drew down nearer towards Piscataqua, for not long after a party of them came upon Cape Nidduck, where they killed and carried away all the inhabitants of a few scattering houses, to the number of seven in all; and such was their savage cruelty exercised in this place, as it is not usually to be heard of, for having dashed out the brains of a poor woman that gave suck, they nailed the young child to the dead body of his mother, which was found sucking in that awful manner, when the people came to the place. The day before a man and his wife were killed at Wells, and two more soon after. On the 12th of October following near an 100 of the Indians made an assault upon Black-Point, all the inhabitants being gathered into one fortified place upon that point, which a few hands might have defended but as it seems one called Mugg, was the leader of the Indians one that had from a child been well acquainted with the English, and had lived some years in English families who though a cunning fellow, and had succeeded much in his attempts, but at this time shewed more courtesy to the English, than according to former outrages could be expected from any of those barbarous miscreants, and was willing to make offer of a treaty to Mr. Josselin, Chief of the garrison to whom the said Mugg promised liberty for all that were there to depart with their goods upon the surrender of the place : The said Josselin reports that when he came back from his treating with Mugg, that all the people were fled away out of the garrison having carried away their goods by water before his return, inasmuch that having none but his household servants to stand by him, he was capable of making no resistance, and so surrendered.

When people have once been frightened with reports and sense of danger, they are ready to fly away like a hare before the hunter or his hounds; one of the inhabitants of the place affirmed he saw an 150 Indians, which was more by an hundred than any body else ever saw near the fort. But when a place is consigned to rule, every thing they take in hand shall tend that way.

The loss of Black Point was accompanied with another sad accident that happened about the same time at Richmond's island: For young Mr. Fryer, with some others at Piscataqua, to whom it seemed grievous that the Indians should make all that spoil in every place in those plantations ventured upon the great impetuosity of Mr. Gendal, with a ketch, to try what they could save of such things as the Indians had left; but things were so ordered, that before they had loaded their ketch, coming too near the stage head, they presently found themselves in danger of a surprisal; for part of their company being ashore, they seized by the Indians, or in danger thereof, whom they were not willing to leave behind; and besides the wind blowing in hard upon them they could not get out of the harbour, but were forced to abide the danger of an assault the Indians getting many of them into the stage head, annoyed them so fast with their shot that not a man of them was able to look above deck, but he was in danger of being shot down amongst the rest Mr. James Fryer venturing too much in view of the enemy received a wound in his knee, which appeared not dangerous at first, but for want of better looking to than could be found amongst that black regiment, into whose hands he soon after fell, it proved mortal unto him within a few days after; he being by a strange accident brought home to his father's house at the great island in Piscataqua. Mr. Fryer being thus wounded the rest of the company defended themselves for a while with much courage and resolution till they were brought to the sad choice of falling into the hands of one of these three bad masters, the fire, the water, or the barbarous heathen, to whom at last they thought it best to yield in hopes of liberty afterwards, at least of lengthening out their lives a little longer, for the Indians had manned out a canoe with several hands to cut their cable, and others stood ready within the defence of the stage head, to fire upon any one that stirred in the ketch, by which means the vessel after the cable was cut, soon drove ashore; and then it was threatened to be presently burnt, if they did not all yield, to which they all at last consented.

The Indians how barbarous soever in their own nature, yet civilly treated their prisoners, and upon farther discourse sent two of them to Piscataqua, to give them there an opportunity to ransom their friends. The persons sent home to procure a ransom, were to return with such a quantity of goods as the Indians had desired, by such a precise time; but they that brought the things for their ransom, coming a day or two before the time, when those that sent them were gone up the river at Black Point, and not returned: Some other Indians waiting for such an opportunity, seized the goods, at least that part which they most desired, and through mistake, killing one of the three men that brought them, dismissed the other two, without return of the prisoners as was expected.

As to what happened afterwards we are yet much in the dark, and for the present can write but by guess: For within a few days after the return of Mr. Gendal, and the other man that went to carry the ransom, before the 1st of November, Mugg himself came to Piscataqua, bringing Mr. James Fryer, who soon after died of his wound; one of the prisoners along with him complaining that without his knowledge some of the Indians had seized what was sent for the ransom of the rest, promising upon his faith, that he would make good his word for the sending home all the prisoners, & offered also in the name of the other Indians to confirm a new peace with the English for the future. The Major General of the Massachusetts colony was then at Piscataqua, but not willing to transact a matter of that nature and moment by his sole authority, ordered the said Mug; supposed to be the chief leader of the Indians) to be carried down to Boston to the Governor and Council there, to conclude the business, with whom he soon after agreed upon a firm peace with the English of the Massachusetts, in the name of Madockawando the Chief of all the Indians in the eastern parts about Penobscot, engaging also to remain himself as hostage, aboard the vessel (in which he was sent home from Boston, the 21st of November following) until the prisoners (which are said to be 50 or 60, that they have still in their hands) he sent home, and the rest of the articles performed; the issue of which we as yet wait to hear in God's good time, this 12th day of December following, 1676, when they there have made an end of the reckoning, it is hoped we may have our rights again.

There are two principal actors amongst the Indians that have all along promoted these designs amongst them, one named Squando Sagamore of Saco, and the aforementioned Madockawando, the chief commander of the Indians eastward about Penobscot, who are said to be by them that know them, a strange kind of moralized savages; grave and serious in their speech and carriage, and not without some shew of a kind of religion, which no doubt but they have learned from the Prince of Darkness (by the help of some Papist in those parts) that can transform himself into an Angel of light ; under that shape, the better to carry on the designs of his kingdom. It is said also, they pretend to have received some visions and revelations, by which they have been commanded to worship the great God, and not to work on the Lord's day. We know where that fountain hath its rise, that sendeth forth at the same place sweet & bitter waters ; and from whence their hearts are inspired, that join blessing of God with cursing and killing his servants.

It is reported by some that came lately from those parts, that the Indians there do as yet refuse to have any peace with the English, and will not as yet return any of our captive friends till God speak to the aforesaid enthusiasts, that are their leaders, that they should no longer make war with us, and the like.

But not to trouble ourselves farther with those ministers of Satan, or those that are actuated by the Angel of the bottomless pit, who possibly since their delusions are but two fold more the children of Hell than they were before. We know better how to understand the mind of the great Lord of Heaven and Earth, than to depend on such lying oracles.

That God who hath at present turned their hearts to hate his people, and deal subtilly with his servants, we hope in time, will either turn the stream, and cause them to deal friendly and sincerely with his people as heretofore, or give us an opportunity to destroy them.

In the next place it remains, that some account be given of our forces under Capt. Hathorne, and of their several expeditions into the eastern parts, since the middle of September last ; first up toward Casco, by the sea-side, then afterwards through the woods, directly northward, toward Ossapy & Pigwauchet, in hopes to have found the enemy at their head quarters.

Upon the first report of those devastations and spoils that had been made by fire and sword in those eastern plantations it was judged necessary to send some forces that way to put a stop to the current of those outrages, before the remainder of the southern Indians could have an opportunity to join with them : To that end about an 130 English, with forty Indians, were dispatched away into those parts, under the command of Capt. William Hathorne, Capt. Sill, and Capt. Hunting, who were to join with such as could be raised in those parts, under Major Waldern and Capt. Frost. After they had surprised the Indians that flocked into those parts, (as was related before) which was done upon the 6th of September, 1676, Capt. Hathorne, who was commander in chief, marched the forces by the sea side, towards Casco : For at that time they were upon some demure whether to march directly toward Ossapy and Pigwauchet, where the head quarters of the enemy was supposed to be, or else to march directly toward Casco Bay, where they heard parties of the enemy were daily spoiling the plantations of the English ; the last it was judged most expedient to try if they could not meet with some parties of the enemy amongst those plantations near the sea side, by that means at least to prevent them from doing more mischief, if they could not find an opportunity to fall upon some of them and destroy them ; but their time was not yet come, nor were all the desolations as yet accomplished, which God had a purpose to bring about by their means : For notwithstanding there was a sufficient force to have suppressed all the numbers of the enemy, if they had been many more than they were yet being emboldened and grown subtle by their former successes, they had so dispersed themselves all about the woods in those parts, that when our forces were in one place, they would be in another, and so did much mischief thereabouts, while our soldiers were out after them : For after they had by several steps in ten days time got to Casco from Newechewannick (about the 8th of September) they marched to Wells and from Wells to Winter Harbour, and so from thence to Black Point they passed by water, and then arrived at Casco Bay, about the 20th of Sept. yet about that very time were several of the English cut off at Mountjoy's island, and that in sight of our forces, when they were not able to come at them for want of boats, the island lying two leagues off in the bay ; this happened the 23d of the same month, as was said before.

and within two days after, another party of the enemy were doing mischief at Wells and Cape Nidduck, and yet escaped away when they had done.

Nor could our forces in all their expedition meet with any of them, but two ; one of which soon after he was taken, was let go by the treachery or carelessness of them that held him. For when our Forces were come within a few miles of the hither side of Casco Bay, some of our Natick Indian scouts going in company with the Indians under Blind Will (a Sagamore of Piscataqua, who went in company with 8 of his men, supposed to be good pilots for the places more eastward) met with some of the enemy, and laid hold of a couple of them ; justice was done to one of them ; the other, although he was led by two of Blind Will's Indians, they made shift to let go, who escaping, got over a river, and gave notice to the Indians who were on the other side, and were heard but a little before threshing in a barn that belonged to one Anthony Bracket, whom they had lately surpris'd. Another disappointment our forces met with about the same time ; for when Capt. Hathorne was up at Casco Bay with his soldiers, he never could come up with the Indians, either through want of skill in them that were his scouts, or rather want of faithfulness in one that should have been his guide, who had got his living by trading with the Indians, therefore seemed unwill-

ling to have the brood of them destroyed, as was known afterwards ; and by that means a party of the enemy escaped the hands of our soldiers. Yet it pleased God at one time to bring the forlorn of our forces upon a party of the enemy, who espying the English presently fled away into the woods like so many wild deers ; yet one of them, viz. J. Sampson, who had been of the company that killed Robinson the year before, was by the special hand of Divine justice, suffered to fall by some of our forces ; he was a very lusty, stout man, and one that was armed with several sorts of weapons, but there is no weapon shall defend them whom death hath a commission to destroy ; there is no ransom in that war. The rest of the Indians that were scattered about Casco Bay having discovered our forces made their escape ; but we hope their time is short, and that God will find some way to cut off the bloody and deceitful enemies of his people, and not suffer them to live out half their days.

But by one such accident or other, our soldiers could not meet with any of them that had done the mischief about those parts. While our forces lay about Casco Bay, a small party of the enemy came down upon the borders of the town of Wells, where they lay in ambush near a garrison house at one end of the town, and shot Mr. James Gouge from his horse, on Lord's day, Sept. 24th as he was going home from the meeting, and then knocked down his wife, giving her several wounds with their hatchets about the head, of which she died in three days after.

The next day, Sept. 25th, the same party, being not more than seven in number, went toward York, and surprized Cape Nidduck in a most barbarous manner, killing most of the poor people belonging thereunto. Some of their neighbours hearing the guns, came to their rescue; the Indians being on the further side of a river, dared them to come over and fight with them man to man, using many reproachful expressions, and making a shot at them, which some of the company not being able to bear, did very resolutely adventure through the river after them; but they were not willing to try the valor of the English, when they perceived they found a way to pass over the river upon them, but returned back towards Wells, where they killed one George Farrow, September 27th, as he was too carelessly venturing to his house without any company. These things happened while our forces were at Casco, where they tarried seven or eight days; and hearing of these outrages committed in some of those places which they left behind them, and not being able to meet with any of them in the place where they were, they returned back towards Wells and York; but the Indians were escaped away into the woods after their companions before they came there. Our soldiers having thus spent much time and pains in a fruitless expedition towards Casco, resolved to venture another march after them up towards Ossapy, supposing they might by that time be drawn homewards toward their winter quarters ; or else that they might destroy what they had left behind them, to prevent their harbouring there for the future : But it seemed good to him, who by his sovereign power and infinite wisdom ordereth all events and purposes (wherein his people or others are concerned) to disappoint all endeavors used at that time for the suppressing of the enemy, or putting any stop to their wonted successes ; for soon after our forces were returned back from Casco, news was brought of the surprisal of Black-Point, on the 12th of October, as was mentioned before ; which notwithstanding, it was judged more advisable to venture and proceed on with the expedition towards Ossapy, (whither it was supposed by this time the greatest number of them were retired) rather than to return back again to recover Black Point, where was nothing to be expected but an empty fort, and some deserted houses, which it seems the Indians had forsaken by that time. And besides, that other forces were about the same time ordered to repair thither, sufficient for the repairing and securing the place with what else was left remaining from the hands of the enemy : And likewise several soldiers were ordered to garrison the towns thereabouts, to prevent them from making any further assault upon them.— However, they were so far emboldened by the taking of Black Point, and the ketch at Richmond island, that a party of them came the very next week after, toward Wells, hoping to attain that, and all the towns and places between Casco-Bay and Piscataqua as they had done Black Point : For a party of them under Mugg their chief leader, brought Mr. Gendal along with them to Wells, where they summoned the first garrison at the town's end. To facilitate the business, they sent the said Gendal as their agent or messenger to move them to surrender without hazarding an onset ; but the people were not so despondent as to yield up the place upon so slight an occasion ; which when the enemy discerned, they soon drew off, after they had done some little mischief to the inhabitants ; for first they killed Isaac Littlefield, not far from the garrison ; it is said they would willingly have had him yield himself prisoner, but he refusing, they shot him down, yet they were so civil as to suffer his friends to fetch away his body, without offering any further act of inhumanity, to it, or hostility towards those that carried it off.

An old man called Cross, was likewise killed by them about the same time ; and another whose name was Joseph Bigford, belonging to the garrison, was so badly wounded that he died very soon after. Thirteen head of neat cattle were also killed by them, out of which (through haste) they only took the tongues, leaving the bodies whole to the owners, unless it was the leg of one of them, which was also taken away.

This was all the mischief done by them after the taking of Black-Point. The inhabitants of Winter Harbour, near adjoining thereto, being alarmed with the surprisal of the other place, fled away with their goods for a time until they heard the enemy were moved farther eastward, and then it is said they returned to their place again. In this posture have things remained ever since in those eastern plantations between Piscataqua and Casco Bay.

But our forces under the command of Capt. Hathorne and Capt. Sill, having at last obtained all things necessary for a winter march into the woods, did upon the first of November following, set out towards Ossage, where, after four days march of a very difficult way, over many rivers, not easy to pass at that time of the year, they arrived; but found not an Indian either there or in the way as they marched along. The Indians belonging to those parts had not many years before, hired some English traders to build them a fort for their security against the Mohawks, which was built very strong for that purpose, fourteen foot high, with flankers at each corner; but at this time the soldiers intending to disappoint them of their refuge, made fuel thereof, which at that time was very needful for our people, who had marched many miles through deep snow in a very cold season, when they could hardly keep from freezing as they passed along, so early in the winter. None of the enemy being to be found there in the strongest fort, it was not counted worth while for all the company to march any further; wherefore a small party being sent up eighteen or twenty miles farther northward amongst the woods, where as they passed along they met with many vast lakes, (supposed to be the cause of the sharpness of the cold in that side of the country) making the place scarce habitable for any besides those savages that used to hunt thereabouts for moose in the winter, and beaver in the summer.—but at this time it is supposed they were all gone lower, toward the sea side, to share the spoils of the English plantations lately surprised by them, which is all the reward they have met with, who in former years for the sake of a little lucre by traffic with them, have run themselves there into the very jaws of destruction, either by irregular dealing with them or by their too much confidence in their deceitful friendship.

The 9th of November, our forces having spent nine days in this service, returned safe to Newechewannick from whence they set forth at the first, having run more hazard of their limbs by the sharpness of the frost, than of their lives by any assault from their enemies.

There was great probability that the design might have had some good effect if Mugg did not much abuse those he fled unto, with a proffer of peace; for he told them that there were about an hundred of them about Ossapy not many days before. But it becomes us to look beyond second causes in events of this nature & conclude that God had raised up their barbarous enemies to bring a like chastisement upon the English in this side of the country, with that which others had endured elsewhere in the end of the former and beginning of the present year.

Whereas mention was formerly made of a peace concluded at Boston, between the Governor and Council of the Massachusetts and Mugg an eastward Indian, in the name of Madockawando, chief Sagamore of all the Indians about Pemmaquid and Penobscot; which said Mugg was sent from Boston, Nov. 21st, with two vessels to receive the prisoners there detained by the Indians, and also to see the ratification of the several articles of the said peace concluded upon; which articles for the better satisfaction of those that have not been acquainted with them, are thought fit to be here inserted, and are as follow, viz.

BOSTON, Nov. 6, 1676.

Covenants and agreements made and concluded by and between the Governor and Council of the Massachusetts colony in New-England, of the one part ; and Mugg, Indian, in the name and behalf of Madockawando and Cheberrina, Sachems of Penobscot, on the other part.

1. WHEREAS the said Mugg hath been sent and employed by the said Sachems upon a treaty with the said Governor and Council relating to a conclusion of peace doth hereby covenant and engage for himself and in behalf of the said Sachems, that from henceforth they will cease all acts of hostility, and hold an entire and firm union and peace with all the English of the colonies in New England.

2. That immediately upon the said Mugg's return the said Sachems shall deliver up unto such Englishman, or men, as shall by order of the said Governor and Council be sent with him, all such English captives, vessels and goods whatsoever, arms and great artillery belonging to the English, as are in their custody, or under their power, as have been taken from them during the time of the late hostility.

3. That they will use their utmost endeavor with all possible speed to procure pay, wherewith to make full satisfaction unto the English for all such injuries, losses and damages, as they have sustained by them in their housing, cattle, or other estate, during the time of the late hostility ; or else to pay such a number of beaver skins yearly in order thereunto as shall be agreed on between the said Sachems : and such person or persons as shall be sent unto them from the said Governor and Council for the ratification hereof to be paid at such a time and place as shall be agreed upon.

4. That upon condition of the English furnishing of them with powder and ammunition for their necessary supplies and maintenance, they do covenant and promise not to trade for, or buy any ammunition, but of such persons as shall from time to time be deputed by the Governor for that end.

5. That if it doth appear that Walter Gendal, and the men sent with him in the vessel from Piscataqua (with goods from Mr. Fryer for the redemption of captives according to agreement) or any of them are surprized and slain by any of their Indians, or any other whom they can bring under their power, that they shall forthwith execute such murderers, or otherwise deliver them up into the hands of the English.

6. That if the Amoscoggan or any other Indians in the eastern parts, that are in hostility with the English, shall not fully consent unto these covenants and agreements, but shall persist in acts of hostility against the English, that then the said Sachems shall, and will hold all such Indians to be their enemies, and to take up arms against them, and engage them as such.

Lastly, The said Mugg, as a pledge and assurance of his own fidelity, and that he is empowered by the said Sachems for the end aforesaid, and for the performance of the aforementioned agreements, doth freely and willingly deposit himself, and his life in the hands of the English, to remain with them as a hostage until the said captives, goods and vessels shall be delivered up.

Signed in presence of

JOHN EARTHY.

The X mark
of Mugg, Indian.

The said Mugg lifted up his hand to heaven for the true performance thereof, esteemed amongst them a strong obligation to perform what they promise.

Things were so ordered by the good Providence of God, that the said vessels arrived safely at Penobscot in the beginning of the next month, where they found the said Madockawando, who was ready to confirm and make good the articles of the peace concluded at Boston by his agent in his name ; and was willing also to deliver all the prisoners that were then in his power, or under his command, which were but eleven, who were taken in the vessel at Richmond's island, the 12th of October last. The said Mugg likewise being sensible of the obligation he lay under to make his word good, did venture to go up himself to another plantation of the Indians, where we supposed some more of the English prisoners were, to see whether he could obtain a release, also to persuade the rest of the Indians thereabouts to join in the confirmation of the peace : It appeared to the persons belong to the vessels, that the said Mug, went with reluctance, as fearing the Indians he was going amongst, would either kill him or keep him prisoner ; to which end, he ordered the commanders belonging to the vessels, to tarry for him about three days, or four at the most, assuring them, that if he did not return by that time, they might certainly conclude that either his life or liberty was taken from him ; however, the vessels tarried about or near a week beyond the time limited, in expectation of his coming ; but after so long stay, they neither seeing nor hearing from him, were ready to fear the worst, viz. that his countryman had made him sure, from having more to do with the English whereupon for fear of being shut up by the sharpness of the winter from returning themselves, they took the opportunity of the next fair wind, of setting sail for Boston (only turning into Pemmaquid, to see if they could hear any farther news there) where they arrived with such prisoners as were freely delivered by Madockawando, the 25th of December following, anno. 1676 ; amongst which prisoners, besides the two aforementioned, who where found at Penobscot, there was a third, by a more remarkable Providence than ordinary, added unto them, Mr. Thomas Cobbet, son of that reverend and worthy minister of the gospel, Mr. Thomas Cobbet, pastor of the church at Ipswich, a town within the Massachusetts jurisdiction, who had all the time of his son's captivity, together with his friends, wrestled with God in their daily prayers for his release, and accordingly he was with the more joy received by his friends, as an answer and return of their prayers. The said young man had lived with Mr. Fryer, merchant, of Portsmouth, for some years before, and had been often at sea with Mr. James Fryer, the eldest son of the said merchant, and who had after much experience of his faithfulness, dexterity, and courage on all such accounts, borne him so much respect, that when he was urged by his father to go along with Mr. Gendal, as was said before, he would not venture unless his friend Thomas Cobbet, would go along with him ; which service he only for his friends sake accepted, which proved a fatal adventure to Mr. James Fryer, and might have been to the other also had not God otherwise disposed of him, having, as is hoped, more serving for him in the land of the living. Amongst all the prisoners at that time taken, the said Thomas Cobbet seemed to have had the hardest portion ; for besides the desperate danger that he escaped before he was taken first by a bullet shot through his waistcoat, secondly by a drunken Indian, who had a knife at his throat to cut it, when his hands were bound, when the Indians came to share the prisoners amongst them he fell into the hands of one of the rug-

gedest fellows, by whom within a few days after his surprizal, he was carried first from Black Point to Sheepscot river, in the ketch, which the Indians made to sail in, in the said river, from whence he was forced to travel with his Pateroon, four or five miles over, and to Damariscottee, where he was compelled to row or paddle in a canoe, about fifty miles farther to Penobscot and there taking leave of all his English friends and acquaintance, at least for the winter, he was put to paddle a canoe up fifty or sixty miles farther eastward, to an island called Mount Desert, where his Pateroon used to keep his winter station, and to appoint his hunting voyages ; and in that desert like condition was the poor young man forced to continue nine weeks in the service of a savage miscreant, who sometimes would tyrannize over him, because he could not understand the language and for want thereof, might occasion him to miss of his game, or the like. Whatever sickness he was subject to, by chance of diet, or on any other account, he could expect no other allowance than the wigwam will afford : If Joseph be in the prison, so long as God is with him there, he shall be preserved, and in due time remembered.

After the end of the nine weeks, the Indian whom he was to serve, had spent all his powder, whereupon on a sudden he took up a resolution to send this young man down to Penobscot to Mr. Casteen to procure more powder to kill moose and deer, which it seems is all their way of living at Mount Desert; the Indians was certainly overruled by Divine Providence in sending his captive down thither, for a few days before, as it seems, after the Indians in that place had been powawing together, he told him that there were two English vessels then come into Pemmaquid, or Penobscot, which indeed proved so; yet was it not minded by him surely when he sent his captive thither for powder, for it proved the means of his escape, which his Pateroon might easily have conjectured, if it had not been hid from him. As soon as he arrived at Penobscot, he met with Mugg, who presently saluted him by the name of Mr. Cockett, and taking him by the hand, told him he had been at his father's house (which was the 1st or 2d of November before, as he passed through Ipswich to Boston) and had promised to send him home, as soon as he returned.—Madockawando taking notice of what Mugg was speaking that way, although he was willing that he should be released according to agreement (his Pateroon being one of this Sagamore's subjects, though during the hunting voyage of the winter, he lived at such a distance from him) began to demand something for satisfaction, in a way of ransom, not understanding before that his father was a great preacher, as they use to call it: Reply was made him, that he should have something in lieu of a ransom, viz. a fine coat, which they had for him on board the ves-

fel ; which the Sagamore desired to see, before he would absolutely grant a release ; but upon sight of the said coat seemed very well satisfied, and gave him free liberty to return home. Whilst this Mr. Thomas Cobbet was a prisoner at Mount Desert, going along with the Indians to hunt on an extream cold day, he was so overcome with the sharpness thereof, that all his senses were suddenly benumbed, so that he fell down upon the snow, not being able to stir hand or foot, and had without doubt there perished in a little time, but the Indians he was going along with, missing him, presently ran about the woods to seek him, and when they found him, they were either so pitiful to him, or so careful of their own good, as not to cast away a likely young man, from whom they expected either much service, or a good ransom, for want of a little care and pains to preserve his life ; wherefore taking him upon their shoulders, they carried him into the next wigwarm, so that he soon after revived, and came to himself again, without any farther mischief.

At another time, the savage villain, whose prisoner he was so long as he had strong liquor, for five days together was so drunk he was like a furious mad beast, so that none durst come near him, his squaws he almost killed in one of those drunken fits.

The said Thomas to get out of his sight into the woods all that night, for fear of being injured by him ; where making a fire, he kept himself alive ; the squaws being by God's special Providence so inclined to pity, that they came to him daily with victuals, by which means he was at that time also preserved ; all which put together, makes his deliverance the more remarkable, as an answer of prayer.

As for the rest of the prisoners (which are said to be 50 or 60) they were left with those who first surprized them at Kennebeck, and Sheepscot river : The women are employed it seems to sew, and make garments for them : they having plundered many English goods at Arowick. They are so much elated with their late successes, in spoiling so many English habitations, that they seem not very ready to hearken to terms of peace, as their Sagamore Madockawando doth desire : Nor are the English able to come near them with any of their forces this winter season, in regard both of the remoteness of the place, and sharpness of the cold, which used to be extream in those parts. How their hearts may be inclined in the following year, or what the English may be enabled to do against them, is known unto God only, on whom we desire to wait for a comfortable issue of these our troubles. But until they have spent all the plunder that is taken, it is no doubt, but they will seem averse from having peace ; as others to the westward did, whose hearts were hardened against all proffers of that nature, till they were destroyed ; possibly some remnants of them that escaped in those other parts, are got hither amongst these and do animate them all they can to hostility against us, till they make these as miserable as themselves, and so forced at the last to fly their country. Many have been the troubles we have met with from these our barbarous neighbors round about us, but God we trust will deliver us out of them all, as he hath promised to do for the righteous, who may in the darkest night of affliction say, light is sown for them, which shall spring up in the appointed time thereof.

No farther news came to hand concerning the English prisoners at Kennebeck, after the return of Capt. Moore, from Penobscot, till the 5th of January ; when one Francis Card with another young man, formerly an inhabitant of some place about Kennebeck, or of Arowsick (but then a prisoner with the Indians) made an escape from them, and got over to Casco Bay, and then to Black Point, from thence he was conveyed to Piscataqua soon after, and then to Boston.

The manner of his escape, as he reports was this : He was employed by the Indians to thresh corn at a barn a little lower in the river, than the place where the Indians commonly kept ; being trusted alone, to go and come of himself, because there was no suspicion of any coming to carry him away, or seeming possibility to get away without being discovered, he found means to plot with another young man, who was sent to look horses; whose flesh it seems is by those wild savages, preferred before the best beef, so that having their choice of both, they took what they liked best. This being the employment of the young man, he had the better opportunity when he was in the woods to make a contrivance to get away.— Thus being resolved upon their design, they provided necessaries accordingly, and sent such a message home to their masters, as might occasion them not to expect them very soon that night. Thus resolved, they marched away as soon as they perceived the coast was clear; and having provided a canoe accordingly fit for the design, by the help of which they got over the water by which they were to pass, which was not frozen; and in the night time turned into a swamp, where they might make a fire to keep them from suffering with the cold without being discerned; so that within two or three days they recovered the fort and garrison at Black Point, from whence they were soon conveyed to Boston.

This Francis Card made his relation of matters when he came to Boston, viz. that the prisoners which he left behind were well, and not much ill used, only put to do the servile work about the Indians. Woe must it needs be with christians, when put not only to sojourn, but to serve in those tents of Kedar.—

Such of the woman as were skilled in knitting and sewing were employed to make stockings and garments for their Pateroons : So it seems in the ware-house at Arowick furnished them with cloth, stuff, and linen, and the inhabitants served for artificers to cut it out, and make it up.

He reported also the Indians spake nothing of any peace ; but rather being heightened with their late and great successes, were contriving how to get possession of the other places in the hands of the English on that side of the country, which God forbid should ever come to pass ; but finding so easy work of their former exploits, they hope to accomplish their purposes, with the like facility in all other places where they come.

It seems Squando is their chief leader, that enthusiastical, or rather diabolical miscreant ; who hath put on a garb of religion, and order, his people to do the like ; performing religious worship amongst the Indians in his way, yet is supposed to have very familiar converse with the devil, that appears to him as an angel of light in some shape or other very frequently. This Francis Card also affirmeth, that there is not so great a number of the Indians as is here in reported ; for he saith, when they were going out upon some design, while he was in their hands, he had opportunity to count them all and could find but 98 of them that were men ; neither could he discern that there were any of the western Indians, unless Simon and Andrew, that formerly escaped out of Dover prison : although it was before apprehended there were multitudes of them flocked thither.

Francis Card's declaration of their beginning August 14th.

The Indians came to Richard Hammond's, and there killed Richard Hammond, Samuel Smith, Joshua Grant, there parting their company, eleven men came up Kennebeck river to my house, and there took me, and my family. Therefore the rest of their company went to Arowick, and there took the garrison : About a fortnight after, they came down Kennebeck river, and so went down to Damaril's Cove, and their burnt houses, and killed cattle ; then coming back parted their company ; one party went to Jewel's island, and the other party went to Sagadahock, being in number 81. Those that went to Sagadahock took a shallop ; from thence came to Kennebeck river, and then went to killing and destroying of cattle and houses ; for they had intelligence of a ketch and a shallop at Damaril's Cove and going there they took the shallop, and killed two men, being in number about 80. The next day made up their forces, went out to Black-Point, being about an 120 fighting men, and are now in two forts about 60 at a place, with six or eight wigwams between the two forts.

Now the best place to land men is in Casco.

Bay, and in Kennebeck river; the one place being eight, the other about fourteen miles from the fort where I was kept; and if the army do not go with speed, they will be gone forty miles farther up in the country. At the first taking of me they carried me up to Taconet, and the men coming down, they brought me and two more men down for fear of our killing their women and children; for they kept their women and children at Taconet all the summer. As soon as the warm weather doth set in, they do intend to go away to Taconet, and there to build two forts, for there is their fishing places and planting ground. Squando doth inform them that God doth speak to him, and doth tell him that God hath left our nation to them to destroy, and the Indians take for truth all that he tells them; because they have met with no affront. Now Mugg the rogue, being come again to the fort, doth make his brags and laughs at the English, and saith, that he hath found the way to burn Boston, and doth make laughter at your kind entertainment; they make their brags how they do intend to take vessels, and to go to all the fishing islands, and so to drive all the country before them; reckon to be a great number in the spring. There is a great many Indians at Canada that have not been out this summer, both of Kennebeck and Damarascoggin, therefore a great many of these Indians at Kennebeck do intend to go to Canada in the spring to them. And they do give gift both of captives, and of goods to the eastern Indians, to have them to go with them ; but as yet I do not know what they will do, for Madockawando and Squando are of several judgments, and so have parted, and Madockawando doth pretend love to the English captives as civilly as we can expect by such a people. That this is truth, is declared by me Francis Card, the 22d of Jan. 1679.

By the report which he brings it doth not appear so difficult a matter to make an attempt to recover the place, and destroy them that hold it, as was before apprehended : Infomuch as that design that was under debate before the Governor and Council a little before and was let fall for the present, as a matter not feasible, hath since been set on foot with a fresh resolution : And another thing also occurred about the same time, which put new life into the said design, viz. an apprehension that there were several of the Narrhagansets scattered about in these woods near Piscataqua, who it was feared might join with those of Kennebeck in the spring, and so come down upon the English plantations, and spoil them all that are thereabouts. For soon after Francis Card came to Boston, some of Major Waldern's Indians at Quecheco, as they were hunting in the woods chanced to meet with three strange Indians, two of which had guns but those of Quecheco were without. The other Indians began to insinuate into them, to see if they could make way for their acceptance with the English : Those Indians that this motion was made unto, in a most perfidious manner gave them encouragement in the business, and appointed a place where to meet them the next day, saying they could not have them go home with them to their wigwams lest their women & children should be frightened with the sight of their guns ; all which was spoken upon a treacherous account, by that means to betray them, for they had neither women nor children at their wigwams ; but not having guns themselves, as the others had, they durst not then seize upon them. The next day therefore, according to appointment, their guests expecting a treaty and a friendly compliance (yet coming apart as was ordered the day before to be the more easily surprized) arrived at the place appointed ; and there presently the first, being thus treacherously brought into the snare, was dispatched out of hand. The like was also done to the second. The third was at such a distance, but he either discerned or suspected what became of his fellows, and therefore made the more haste to escape ; but his deceitful friends were too quick for him, who shot him down before he could get out of their reach ; so that they took him alive, as is said ; but he could not live much longer by reason of his wounds. Quechecho Indians cut off the scalps of their poor countrymen (which is their usual manner, when it is too far to carry their heads) which being brought to Major Waldern's Indians they were presently discerned to be Narrhagansetts by the cut of their hair. This instance is a sufficient evidence of the subtilty, guile and falshood, natural to all these Indians and may satisfy any rational person, what little trust there is to be put in their words, promises, or engagements, though never so solemnly made, farther than they that make them, for advantage in the keeping and performing. Subtilty, malice and revenge, seems to be as inseparable from them, as if it were apart of their essence.

Whatever hopes may be of their conversion to christianity in after time, there is but little appearance of any truth in their hearts at present, where so much of the contrary is so ordinarily breathed out of their mouths.

These manners of the Gentiles in former times while they remained children of disobedience, until they were renewed after another image : Nor are these uncapable subjects for divine grace to work upon ; yet are there some natural vices proper to every nation in the world, as Paul speaks of the Grecians, from the testimony of one of their own poets.

But to return. These things so concurring and several gentlemen from about Piscataqua repairing to Boston, so represented the state of things eastward before the Governor and Council, that it was apprehended not only necessary, but sensible also to suppress the aforesaid Indians in those parts : Whereupon it was forthwith concluded that an expedition should be made against them ; to which end 250 soldiers, whereof about 60 were of Natick Indians, who had given good proof of their valour and faithfulness to the English ; all which were immediately dispatched away the first week in February, by water, under the conduct of Major Waldern, as commander in chief ; a person well approved for his activity, as well as fidelity and courage in matters of this nature. They had to encounter with rough and contrary winds, and much cold weather the first week after their setting out ; but having so much experience of the favor and goodness of Almighty GOD, who is always wont to be present with his servants in like cases, though he hath often for a time deferred, for the trial of their faith and exercise of their patience, yet useth not to fail his people, that put their trust in him being appointed for that end, to which we expect a comfortable answer. We that have sent forth our friends on the public service, being thus engaged to follow them with prayers at present in silence wait upon the Lord of Hosts to give a blessing to the design ; hoping our friends in this necessary, though difficult service, thus called forth, have gone out with the like encouragement and resolution that sometimes Joab did. Let us be of good courage, and play the men of our people, and for the cause of our God. And let the Lord do that which seemeth him good.

Upon the 11th of February, two Indian Squaws that had run away from Major Walden's in the beginning of winter, out of discontent, because the husband of one of them, and some of the relations of the other were sent away, came back with more wit than they carried away with them, though with less flesh upon their backs; having wandered up toward Pigwauchet, till they were almost starved there. They say some Indians were seen by them, pretending they were going to the head of Connecticut river, with hostile intents against the English; but they going away in the manner before described, little heed is to be given to the stories they tell upon their return.

The 19th of February following, John Abbot, the master of Mr. Fryer's ketch taken October 12th, at Black Point, came into the Isle of Shoales, having made a desperate adventure to escape. He gave a more probable account of things in those parts.

He saith they were first carried to Sheepscot river, where the vessel in which they were taken was moored all the winter; in which time the Indians having sent all their ammunition and most of their provision, thought it high time to be looking out for more; to which end they caused the said Abbot to fit up the vessel (being a pinnance of about 30 tons) as well as he could, with such assistance as they could afford him ; and ten of them shipped themselves in the same, intending for Penobscot ; from thence to sail up that river as far as they could ; and then leaving their vessel to proceed on with their canoes as high up the river as the stream would permit, and so to pass on to Canada, to buy powder of the French there ; it being at this time thirty two shillings a pound amongst the Indians at Kennebeck. But as Providence ordered it, after these mariners launched into the deep a small storm with a contrary wind began to rise ; of which the English skipper found ways in his steering to make the danger seem more than really it was, insomuch that they resolved to put in at Capebonawagon, three leagues to the eastward of Sheepscot where eight of them went on ashore, leaving two Indians on board with the English skipper. After he had got so well rid of them he contrived how to get clear of the other also ; therefore he persuaded them that the vessel would not ride safely in that place, so that he prevailed with them to let him go to another harbour called Damaril's Cove two or three leagues more eastward. In the way as he sailed he so ordered his steering that sometimes the waves were ready to overtake the vessel, which put his two Indians into a fright, so as they made all the haste they could to get ashore, as soon as they came within the harbor urging him to go along with them ; but he pretended

a necessary excuse to stay behind to look after the vessel; but with intent as soon as he should see them ashore, to hoist sail for some English harbour, having no body on board with him, but a small English child about three years old. It seems the Indians had a child or two of their own dead in the vessel, who dying after they began their voyage, they were the forwarder to go on shore with them for burial. The said Abbot now perceiving he had obtained his purpose (for he resolved on this project before) first greasing the mast with a piece of fat pork left by the Indians, as high as he could reach, that he with his own hands might the more easily hoist the sail, so chusing rather to cast himself upon the Providence of God in waters, than to trust himself any longer with the perfidious savages on the dry land, he came safe to the isle of Shoales before the evening of the next day, the 19th of February.

Within a few days after John Abbot aforesaid made his escape in the vessel, there came an express from Maj. Waldern (the commander in chief over our forces sent to Kennebeck to subdue the Indians in those parts, and deliver the English captives that have been detained in their hands since Aug. last) which giveth this account of their proceeding.

Feb. 17th. This morning the wind north-east, soon alter south and south-west, we set sail with our vessels from Black-Point, for Portland but on the east side of Cape Elizabeth, we espied John Pain (who was sent out a scout) who brought word the way was clear of ice and Indians; whereupon we steered for Mary Point at the head of Casco-Bay, and got there this night, but too late to get to the fort before morning.

Feb. 18. We sent this morning our scouts out by land, who returning about 8 o'clock, brought word they saw the tracks of three Indians, and found a birch canoe at Muckquit, about 4 miles off, by which we feared we were discovered; the companies about four o'clock were drawn forth, and just beginning their march when we espied five of the enemy about half a mile off; they landed over against us on an island, and hallowed to us, whereby we perceived they desired a treaty; hoping to gain the captives, we sent John Pain to them, they promised him to bring the captives by morning and desired peace. After this John Pain was sent again, and stayed among the Indians in the room of Simon, who came to the Major. He was questioned, and answered as follows.

Quest. How came you to know we were here?

Answ. We continually kept out our scouts, and yesterday our Indians left a canoe at Muckquit, which this day we missed, and perceived the English had taken it, and our men that left the canoe espied you a great way off at Portland.

Quest. Why did you break your covenant with me ?

Answ. Blind Will stirred us up to the war here, and said he would kill you at Quechecho. Simon having said this, asked the Major what his business was here, to whom it was answered, we came to fetch off the captives and make war as we see good. Simon also told us that the captives were all well, that we should have them by morning, that Squando was there, and would give the captives to Major Waldern that they intended peace, and had sent to Boston before now, but that Mugg told them the English would be here shortly.

The Major upon this dismissed Simon, and sent for Squando, to which Squando answered he would meet him half way if he would come alone in a birch canoe. To this the Major answered, he would not venture himself in one of their leaky canoes, and that if he had no more to say, the treaty was ended : To this Squando answered, he would be with us again at ten o'clock, and bring the captives.

Feb. 19th. Wind north-east, the weather thick : About noon we discovered a party of Indians in fourteen canoes about three miles above us in the bay ; they landed on a point of land, and burnt one English house, and shouted to some of our men that were scouts, challenging them to fight : Immediately on the return of our scouts we marched against them.

as secretly as we could ; upon sight of us they fled ; but Capt. Frost. came upon them with his whole body before they were half out of gun shot : In this skirmish we judged we killed and wounded several of them without any damage, yet some of their bullets hit some of our men. For the Captain's sake immediately after this we hung out a flag of truce, and the enemy did the like. John Pain was sent to them to demand the reason why they fired the house, and broke their promise.

Simon met him half way, and answered, the house was fired accidentally without order from Squando ; that they had sent for the captives who were a great way off, and the foul weather hindered their coming : He questioned John Pain also why we fought them while we were in treaty.

Pain answered, they broke it themselves in not performing their promises challenging our soldiers to fight ; the latter Simon denied, and answered the other as before : Simon told him they had two men wounded, and expected satisfaction, but also promised the captives the next day, and so left us.

Feb. 20th. The wind north.east, and snow, it was resolved to sail for Kennebeck the first fair wind, whither we had immediately gone upon our knowledge that we were discovered by the enemy, but that the wind and weather hindered us hitherto.

Feb. 21st. This morning the wind north-west, we set sail for Kennebeck, and arrived at the harbour's mouth at four o'clock. About sun set we set sail up the river, and got to the lower end of Arowsick.

Feb. 22^d. We set sail this morning but could not get to the head of the river for ice whereupon we landed our soldiers at 2 o'clock about twelve miles off Aboundessit fort, and immediately began our march; at 8 o'clock at night, came to the fort; we found no Indians, there we took up our quarters this night.

Feb. 23^d. We sent out scouts to discover the march of the enemy, but found so many tracks every way, that we knew not what way to follow them. At a council of war it was resolved that Maj. Waldern should sail for Penobscot with two ketches, and part of the soldiers to seek after the captives, and fight the enemy if he had opportunity; the rest to build a garrison. In the absence of our forces, the vessels espied several fires below the river, and one English house was burnt; about sun set the soldiers returned to the vessels.

Feb. 24th. This morning the Major with two boats and a shallop, went to spy out a place to settle a garrison, and found one against the lower end of Arowsick island and the vessels are brought to it.

Feb. 23th, We rested here this sabbath.

John Bakers house opposite the lower end of Arowlick being judged the most convenient place for their purpose, as well for the convenience of water for the soldiers, as for a cove wherein ships might ride, within command thereof, their vessels therefore were immediately anchored there, where they rested on the Lords day. Feb. 25th.

Next day according to the advice of the commanders, Major Waldern embarked 60 men in two vessels, with which he set sail immediately for Penobscot, leaving the rest to be employed in making preparation for settling a garrison in the said place.

In their way off from Gyobscut-Point, they espied two Indians in a canoe, that waved their ~~ce~~ as if they desired to speak with them. John Pain and Walter Gendal were presently sent; they gave them intelligence that many Indians were at Pemmaquid with the English captives, upon which they bent their course thither; when arriving, they anchored at four o'clock the same day; soon after two Indians hallowed to them from Mr. Gardner's fort. John Pain was sent ashore to enquire who they were, and what was become of the captives. Sundry sorts of Indians were found about the place with several Sagamores, the chief of whom, was, Mattahando, who told them he was glad to see Englishmen there and that he desired peace, and promised to deliver such captives as were at Pe-nobskot, the next morning; adding also, that he desired to speak with Capt. Davis. After John Pain returned to the Major, he was sent back with the said Davis and stayed ashore till three Sagamores went on board, and signified as much to Major Waldern, as they had before to John Pain. While they were in discourse, an English-captive was espied in a canoe with his Pateroon, with whom they desired to speak, but it was not granted at that time he being carried farther up the river out of sight.

Soon after the Major went on shore with six men, yet carrying no arms with them — He found their words smother than oyl, yet were there drawn swords in their hearts, of which some of their actions gave no small ground of suspicion; for they deferred all till the next morning; nor were they willing to let the man that was espied before in the canoe come on board to see his friends without leaving an hostage in his room, of which the Major was very glad, that he might have an opportunity of a little discourse with one whom they might trust. When they returned from the shore a sign was promised to be given for the appearance of the Indians by the firing of three guns.

The next morning February 27th, the Major with the same number as before, went to treat with them, they, with John Pain, first hallowing to them: Upon their coming on more their persons were searched on both sides, and all arms laid aside. The whole forenoon was spent in a treaty, whereat they seemed much to rejoice in expectation of a peace with the English; yet when Major Waldern desired a present delivery of captives, with assistance of men and canoes to fight the Monoscoggin Indians, enemies to them both, it was denied, though they could not have had a better testimony of their fidelity.

They alledged that the captives were given them by the Kennebeck Indians, and they must have something for keeping them a winter, and therefore were not willing to let them go without a ransom; and as for their canoes, they said they had them in present service, being then bound for Penobscot. The price demanded, twelve skins a person, was yielded to; upon which they delivered William Chadburn, John Winnick, and John Worwood, which were all that they would own, or could be proved they had.

That part of the pay which was to be in liquor, was presently laid down, the rest was promised to be sent in the afternoon. The commanders debated what was farther to be done; one or two of the old Sagamores (who were believed) seemed sincere about the peace professed that none of them had any hand in the war, but only some of their young men, whom they could not rule; but several of the company affirming they saw some of the said Indians at Casco engaged in hostility against the English, it was resolved not to enter into any league of peace with them, but rather to fight them, or surprize them after they had dispatched the business about the captives.

This being determined, the Major with five of his men went on shore, with part of the ransom, the better to beget a confidence in them, and then to return on board again, and fit his men for further service ; but if he had not wisely proved against all exigencies beforehand, he might have been prevented from ever going on board any more, for stepping aside a rof or two from the place for better circumspection, he espied the point of a lance from under a board, hid there, as were other arms near by, for a treacherous design that was in their minds, soon after, upon the receiving the rest of the pay, to have been put into execution. Whereupon Major Waldern took up the lance and came towards them charging them with falshood and treachery, for hiding weapons just by, wherewith to destroy them as soon as they had delivered the goods. The Indians discovered their guilt by their countenances, some of them making towards him, thinking to get the weapon out of his hands ; but he bid them stand off, threatening to kill every one that offered to touch him ; and immediately waved his cap over his head which was the sign agreed upon for all the soldiers to come on shore in case of need) upon which token the soldiers all hastened away. In the mean time the English that went on shore to wait upon the Major, were forced to beskir themselves, both to secure the goods from being carried away, and to defend Major Waldern. Some of the squaws, with others of the enemy ran away; one of them caught up a bundle of guns that were hid near by, and ran off with them.

Captain Frost seized an Indian called Me-gunnaway, a notorious rogue, (that had been in arms at Connecticut last June, at the Falls and saw the brave and resolute Capt. Turner when he was slain about Green River; and helped to kill Thomas Bracket at Casco in August last) and with the help of Lieut. Nutter, according to the Major's order, carried him on board, while himself searching about farther, found three guns hid in a cow-house just at hand, wherewith he armed the other three men that were with him. By this time some of the soldiers were got ashore, and instantly according to their Major's command, pursued the enemy toward's their canoes; in the chase several of the enemy were slain whose bodies were found at their return to the number of seven, amongst whom was Mattahando the Sagamore, with an old Powaw, to whom the Devil had revealed, as sometimes he did to Saul, that on the same day he should be with him; for he had a little before told the Indians, that within two days the English would come and kill them all, which was at the very same time verified upon himself. The body of our men overtook them before they all recovered their canoes so that without doubt, divers others of them were slain likewise for they sunk a canoe, wherein were five drowned before their eyes, and many others were not able to paddle; four they took prisoners, whom they brought away with them.— There was about 25 Indians present at this encounter.

Much more damage might have been done by our men upon the enemy, if they had known the most direct way to their canoes; but the Indians having prepared all things ready for flight, as well as for fight, the more easily made their escape. One of the captives was sister to Madocawando who was entertained very courteously by the Commander in Chief and would have been carried forthwith to her brother in hopes by her means to have gained the better terms for our remaining English captives; had it not been certainly known that he was gone from home upon a hunting design, and not to return in two months.

The English took much plunder from the Indians about a thousand weight of dry beef, with other things. Megunnaway was shot to death the same day or the next; so that justice is by degrees pursuing those perfidious lains, and one after another they are brought under the wheel of destruction. Simon, that arch traitor, seems as is said, by his consumptive looks, to have received the sentence of death, which may bring him into the same place or state with the rest.

Feb. 28th, they set sail for Sheepscot but the wind failing, they put in at Kennebeck, from whence Capt. Fisk with 40 men, were sent to the same place to seek after plunder, where they found between 30 or 40 bushels of good wheat, which they brought away with them; several other things they lighted upon here and there some of which they brought away, such as, one or two great guns, from Sagadahock, and boards from ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~where~~ ^{which} they found an hundred thousand, which they brought home enough for the lading of their vessels, leaving the rest to be transported in a more convenient season.

While our soldiers were upon Arowick, two of the enemy chanced to come upon the place one of them instantly received his reward, the other received his payment in part which however is supposed to amount to the whole, the canoe wherein he was escapeing, being found the next day all bloody, and split asunder.

March 1st, one of the Indian squaws, a captive was sent to Taconet fort, with a message to the Sagamores to treat for the rest of the captives. Five days were given her to return, which were not expired, when Major Wal-
